

元

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA

PRESENTED BY

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

LETTERS FROM ITALY.

BETWEEN THE

YEARS 1792 AND 1798,

CONTAINING

A VIEW OF THE REVOLUTIONS

IN THAT COUNTRY,

FROM THE

CAPTURE OF NICE BY THE FRENCH REPUBLIC

TO THE EXPULSION OF PIUS VI,

FROM

THE ECCLESIASTICAL STATE:

Likewise pointing out

The matchless Works of Art which still embellish Pisa, Florence, Siena, Rome, Naples, Bologna, Venice, &c.

WITH INSTRUCTIONS

For the Use of Invalids and Families

Who may not choose to incur the Expence attendant upon travelling with a COURIER.

BY MARIANA STARKE,

Author of the Widow of Malabar, the Tournament, &c.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

Lendon:

printed by T. Gillet, Salibury-Square, 1 lect-Street, FOR R. PHILLIPS, NO. 71, ST. PAUL'S CHURCH-YARD.

1800,

INTRODUCTION.

AVING witnessed the first entrance of the French into Italy, resided in Tuscany when they seized Leghorn and endeavoured to revolutionize Florence, and having been at Rome in March 1797, when they threatened to overthrow the papal Government, and in February 1798, when that threat was realized, I am tempted to give such a short account of these transactions as Persons on the spot only are capable of detailing.

I shall likewise point out the Architecture, Paintings, and Sculpture, which still embellish Italy; lest Persons disposed to visit that Country should be led, by common report, to conclude that all her choicest works of A 2 genius

Digitized by Google

genius are destroyed, or removed to Paris. The tempera, or, (as they are more usually denominated) fresco-paintings, of Pisa, Florence, and Rome, still remain uninjured; and a confiderable number of Statues, Rilievi, and even Paintings in oil, have hitherto escaped the ravages of War; while the elegant Buildings of Tuscany, the remains of ancient Rome, the Antiquities and Natural Curiofities in the environs of Naples, the Master-Pieces which yet adorn Bologna, and the majestic Edifices of Venice, still render Italy a most interesting and useful fchool of Art. With regard to the danger of residing there at present, I am happy to fay, my letters recently received from Tufcany represent that Country to be more loyal, more tranquil, and more eligible as an abode for Foreigners than any other part of the Continent; and, judging from my own experience, I am strongly inclined to believe, that

introduction.

that English Families travelling for health may, at this moment, reside in any City of Italy with as little risk of inconvenience attributable to war, as they could before the invasion of BUONAPARTE.*

I am likewise encouraged by a hope of being serviceable to those of my Countrymen, who, in consequence of pulmonary complaints, are compelled to exchange their native soil for the renovating sun of Italy, to insert a sew observations (relative to health), the result of seven years experience, during which period my time and thoughts were chiefly occupied by endeavours to mitigate the sufferings of those most dear to me.

* From a letter, dated October 16, 1799, and written by Mr. PARTRIDGE, one of the longest established and most respectable Merchants at Leghorn, it appears, that Tuscany, when he wrote, was perfectly tranquil, and quite uninjured by the late revolutions, so far as affects the comfort of Travellers: provisions, too, were plentiful, and very little enhanced in price

A 3

I pre

I prefume not to imagine myself correct in every thing which I have advanced. The occupation of a Nurse has often prevented me from obtaining accurate knowledge on points worthy of minute investigation. Nevertheless, general outlines will sometimes convey tolerably just ideas of a country, even though the picture be not shaded by a Master's hand; hence, I trust, that the little knowledge I have been able to collect may so far inform Travellers, as to guard them against those serious inconveniences which too generally retard, and not unfrequently prevent, the recovery of consumptive Persons.

I have also given, in the APPENDIX, some particulars relative to Expences upon the Continent, that Families, induced by motives of prudence to reside in Countries where the elegancies of life may be commanded by a fortune barely adequate to surnish necessaries in their own, may not have the mortification of finding their plans defeated by the extravagance of a Courier, or, by the impositions frequently practised upon Strangers.

the

In my account of the Cities of Italy I have mentioned, in notes, those Statues, Paintings, &c. which I believe to have been either seized by the French, or sold by their lawful Possessor; and at the same time have given in the body of my Work, such a description of every remaining Object worthy of notice, as will, I hope, in some measure supply to Travellers the loss of those Antiquarians, whom war may have constrained to abandon their profession.

* Though I have mentioned, in notes, the statues and oil-paintings of the Florentine-Gallery and Palazzo Pitti, I lately heard that all the treasures of the former remain unmutilated, and that many pictures which adorned the latter have been retaken from the French and restored to the Grand-Duke.

A 4

In

In consequence of the Author's distance from the press, some inaccuracies have taken place, which will require the correction of the Reader; it has not been thought necessary to note some others of less consequence.

ERRATA.

Page 11 line 9, for goêtres read goîtres. 24 - 6, for Française read Français. 42 - 12, before one infert only. 50 - 14, for it's always read its.
51 - 18, for facinated read fascinated. 56 - 17, for Directory read Convention. 68 - 1, after fortreffes infert of. 73 - 1, for Cozmona read Cremona. 182 - 12, for Libecis read Libecio. 185 - 12, for Matheo read Matteo. 218 - 5, for to represent read represents. 243 — 11, for he read fhe. 254 — 2, for for read of. in line 15 of note, for goods read gods. 265 - 4, for Muses read Museo. 274 — 15, after walls add are. 287 — 1, for pillure of a read a pillure of. 304 - 1, for bad read bas. 340 - 12, for de read di. 344 - 10, for scenes read scene.

Just published,

BY THE SAME AUTHOR,

Price 28.

THE TOURNAMENT,

A TRAGEDY;

Imitated from the German Drama, entitled AGNES BERNAUER, which was written by a Nobleman of high Rank, and founded on a Fact that occurred in Bayaria about the Year 1485.

CONTENTS.

VOL. I.

LETTER I.

JOURNEY from Nice to Turin over the Maritime-Alps—Description of that Country—Description of Turin—Journey from the gree over Mount Cenis to Geneva—Voltaire's Villa at Ferney—A French Pun.

LETTER II.

Journey from Geneva to Nice—Capture of the latter City—Extraordinary Conduct of Faraudy—Plan formed by the French after they had captured Nice.

LETTER III.

Republican Principles gradually disseminated throughout Tuscany—Lord Hervey ineffectually tries to persuade the Grand Duke to arm his People—Lucca inclined to raise Troops—Rome and Naples tainted with democratic Opinions—Venice declares herself Neuter—Lord Hood takes Possession of Toulon—Tuscany compelled to join with the Allies—Genoa continues Neuter—Plan to annex Corsica to the British Crown—Buonaparte appointed to assist Dugommier in Retaking Toulon—His Success.

LETTER

LETTER IV.

Massena makes himself Master of Saorgio-Buonaparte appointed Commander in Chief of the French Army of Italy-Difficulties he had to encounter-His way fmoothed by Treachery-Defeat of the Austro-Sardinian Troops near Turin-Defeat of Beaulieu at Montenotte and Millessimo-Combat of Dego-Defeat of Colli at Mondovi-King of Sardinia fues for a Suspension of Arms-Conditions on which he obtains it—Buonaparte passes the Po, and grants an Armistice to the Duke of Parma-Battle. of Lodi-The French become Masters of Lombardy-Peace between France and Sardinia-Armiftice between Buonaparte and the Duke of Modena-Conspiracy at Milan, &c.-Battle of Borghetto-Beaulieu driven out of Italy-Mantua invested-Massena enters Verona-Conduct of the Venetians towards the hereditary King of France-His Behaviour-Wurmfer appointed to fucceed Beaulieu-Bologna and Ferrara feized by Buonaparte-Faenza and all Romagna enlift under the republican banners-Seizure of Leghorn by the French-Armiftice granted by Buonaparte to the Pope and the King of Naples-Buonaparte's Vifit to the Grand Duke of Tuscany-His handsome Behaviour respecting British Travellers-Leghorn uneafy under the French Yoke-The Grand-Duke's Behaviour to Salicetti.

LETTER

LETTER V.

Wurmfer gains confiderable advantages, but is at length defeated by Buonaparte—The Austrians reaffemble in great Force—Buonaparte nearly taken at Lonado—He gains another Victory over Wurmfer, who retreats to Roveredo—Fresh Successes of the French, who become Masters of Trent, and the Passes leading to Vienna—Wurmser throws himself into Mantua—Flourishing Situation of French Affairs—Buonaparte betrays his Intentions with respect to Italy.

LETTER VI.

Transactions in the Roman State—The Pope rejects the Conditions of Peace proposed to him by France—His unwise Conduct—D'Alvinzi sent to relieve Mantua—Battle of Arcola—New Exertions to relieve Mantua—Buonaparte goes to Bologna—D'Alvinzi routes a Division of the French Army—Buonaparte's Interview with an Austrian Officer—Battle of Rivoli—Mantua surrenders—Buonaparte enters the Papal Territories—Colli sent to oppose him—Successes of the French—Duke Braschi sent to implore Peace—The Pope prevented from absconding by two English Gentlemen—Peace between Rome and the French Republic.

LETTER VII.

Apprehensions entertained by the Court of Naples for the Sasety of Vienna—Buonaparte passes the Tagliamento, Tagliamento, and proceeds to Bruck-Preliminaries of Peace figned between France and the Emperor-Buonaparte closes the Campaign by destroying the Aristocracy of Venice, and revolutionizing Genoa-Situation of Rome-Monopolies practifed by Duke Braschi-Debasement of the Coin-Universal Discontent of the Romans-Riots-Duphot killed, and the French Ambassador slightly wounded -The Latter leaves Rome-The Minds of the Romans amused by Priestcraft-Berthier ordered to march against Rome-Prince Belmonte sent to treat with him-He refuses all Terms of Accommodation—The Romans enjoined by the Pope not to refift their Invaders-Berthier possesses himself of Rome-The temporal Authority of the Pope abolished—The dethroned Sovereign removed to Tuscany-Character of Pius VI.

LETTER VIII.

Genoa — Harbour — Cathedral — Other Churches—
Palaces — Hospitals — Environs — Inns — Population Climate — Character of the Genoese.

LETTER IX.

Voyage from Genoa to Leghorn—Description of Leghorn—Objects most worth Notice in that City—Best Inn.

LETTER X.

Pifa-Duomo — Baptistery — Campanile — Campofanto — Churches — Palaces — Hospitals — University — Observatory — Botanical Garden.

LETTER

LETTER XI.

Antiquities—Modern Baths—Mountain of S. Giuliano Modern Aqueduct—Canal—Cafeina—Character of the Pifans—Inns—Lodging-Houses—Water—Theatre—Battle of the Bridge—Illumination.

LETTER XII.

Excursion to Lucca—Description of the Objects most worth Notice in that City—Police—Character of the People—Journey from Lucca to the Bagni-Caldi—Descriptione of som extraordinary Bridges—Situation of the Bagni-Caldi—Climate—Bagni della Villa—Monte-Fiorita.

LETTER XIII.

Florence—Palazzo Vecchio—Loggia—Piazza—Royal Gallery-Palazzo Pitti-Giardino di Boboli-Mufeo d'Istoria Naturale-Duomo-Campanile-Baptistery—Churches—Medicco Laurenziana Library -Chapel de' Medici-Church of S. Marco-Convent—Reale Accademia delle belle Arti—L'Oratorio dello Scalza-Miraculous Picture in the Church of the Annunziata—Corridor leading to the Church -Description of the Church-Corridor which contains the Madonna del Sacco-Another Corridor-Refectory, &c .- Church of Sa. Maria Maddalena de' Pazzi-Church of Sa. Croce-Convent-Church of Orfanmichele-Church of Sa. Maria Novella-Convent-Church of S. Spirito-Church of Il Carmine-Convent-Palaces-House of Buonarroti-Palaces-Hospitals-Column in Via Romana-Bronze Bronze wild Boar—Theatres—Tempera-Paintings over the Porta San Gallo, and near the Porta-Romana—Bridges—Studio of the Brothers Pisani—Marble which represents Landscapes—A long refidence at Florence bad for the Eyes—Distinguished Persons who were Natives of Florence—Academies—Hotels—Water—List of Objects most worth notice, as they lie contiguous to each other.

LETTER XIV.

Festa of S. Giovanni—Game called Pallone—Environs of Florence—Cascini—Careggi de' Medici—Anecdote respecting the Physician of Lorenzo il Magnifico—Pratolino—Fiesole—Vallombrosa—Character of the Florentines—Tuscan Peasantry—Laws of Leopold—Population of Tuscany.

'LETTER XV.

Description of Sicna—Environs—Country between Siena and Rome—Anecdotes.

LETTER XVI.

Rome—Climate—Aqueducts which now supply the City—Population—Valuable frescos, &c. still remaining—Climate particularly congenial to old People—Best Situations for Travellers—Society—Academy of the Arcadians—Colosseo—Tempio del Sole e della Luna—Arco di Constantino—Arco di Tito—Via Sagra—Arco di Settimo Severo—Tempio di Giove Tonante—Tempio della Concordia—Chiesa di S. Pietro in Carcere—Tempio di Saturno—Tempio di Antenino Pio e Faustina—Tempio Tempio di Romolo e Remo-Tempio della Pace-Palazzo Imperiali-Villa Spada-Tempio di Giove Stator-Campo Vaccino-Tempio della Pudicitia -Tempio di Vesta-Tempio di Fortuna Viriles-Arco di Giano Quadrefronte-Cloaca Maxima-Campidoglio-Pantheon-Obelisk-Tempio del 'Sole nel Giardino Colonnese-Statues, Horses, and Obelifk in the Piazza di Monte Cavallo-Palazzo Pontifico-Bafilica of Nerva-Tempio di Pallade Chiefa di S. Gregorio nel Monte Celio-Terme di Tito-Chiefa di S. Martino in Monte-Battisterio di Costantino-Basilica di S. Giovanni in Laterano -Obelisk-Tempio di Minerva Medica-Church of S. Bibiana-Arco di Gallieno-Piazza di Sa. Maria Maggiore-Bafilica di Sa. Maria Maggiore Obelisk-Terme di Diocleziano-Church of Sa. Maria degli Angeli-Chiefa di S. Bernardo-Obelisk on Trinita de' Monti-Chiesa de' Trinita de' Monti-Chiefa di Sa. Maria del Popolo-Obelifk-Colonna Antonina-Solar Obelifk-Colonna Trajana-Teatro di Marcello-Portico di Ottavia-Palazzo Corfini----Church of S. Onofrio----Villa Lanti-Palazzo Sa. Croce-Palazzo Spada-Bafilica di Antonino Pio-Maufoleo d'Augusto-Campus Martius-Castel di S. Angelo-Fontana Paulina-Fontana Navona-Fontana di Trevi-Fontana di Termine.

Interesting Travels recently Published, and which may be had of all Booksellers.

THE MOST FAITHFUL, AUTHENTIC, AND COMPLETS ACCOUNT OF NORTH AMERICA.

In Two large Volumes, Quarto, Price 21. 14s. in Boards, With Three Sheet Maps, Statistical Tables, &c.

TRAVELS THROUGH THE UNITED STATES or NORTH AMERICA,

THE COUNTRY OF THE IROQUOIS AND UPPER CANADA, in the years 1796, 1797, and 1798;

BY THE DUKE DE LA ROCHEFOUCAULT LIANCOURT,

With an authentic Account of LOWER CANADA,

Either Volume may be bad separate, Price 11. 75.

AN AUTHENTIC NARRATIVE OF THE JOURNEY OF THE EMBASSY OF THE DUTCH EAST-INDIA COMPANY

TO THE COURT OF THE EMPEROR OF CHINA,

In the Years 1794-5 (subsequent to that of the Earl of Macartney,)

By A. E. VAN BRAMM, Secretary to the Embassy.

In two Volumes Octavo, Price 128. in Boards.

LETTERS FROM ITALY,

BETWEEN

THE YEARS 1792 AND 1798.

LETTER I.

Nice, September 1792.

A S you wish for a description of that chain of Alps which seems designed by Nature to protect Italy from the invasions of her Gallic neighbours, I will send you a short account of our late excursion over these mountains to Geneva.

We undertook this journey during the end of May, giving for fix horses which drew our English coach, and a saddle-horse for our courier, 28 louis-d'ors from Nice to Turin; and bearing our own expenses at inns, which amounted to a couple of crowns Vol. I. B a day a day for dinner, and three for supper and beds: we were four in number, besides our courier, who sound himself.

After driving about five miles on the banks of the river Paglion, we began to afcend the mountain of Scarena, by a road cut out of rocks, and rendered, by means of vast and almost innumerable arches, as fmooth and fafe as the turnpikes of England: walls are built on the fides of every precipice, fo that this road refembles one continued bridge carried from rock to rock. After ascending for nearly three hours, we reached the village of Scarena, which contains a comfortable inn; here we dined, and then proecceded to Sofpello. After winding for two hours and a half up a mountain composed of red, grey, and white marble, the road fuch as above-described, only that it is cut in a zig-zag, and fometimes the turns are sharp, we reached the summit, which prefented us with a view of Sospello lying at our

our feet, and not half a mile distant as the crow flies, yet, so high was the Alp we were upon, that we had nine miles to go ere we could reach Sospello. This village is built on the banks of the Paglion, and furrounded with Alps; here are two tolerable inns, at one of which we flept, and next morning proceeded up the mountain of Sospello, which is higher than Scarena; we, therefore, found the road more wonderful than on the preceding day, winding through immense rocks of marble, part of which were blown up with gunpowder in order to make room for carriages to pass. Near Sospello stands an ancient Roman castle; but, what feems extraordinary, the old Roman road over these Maritime-Alps is no where discoverable. After ascending for above three hours we reached the fummit of the mountain, and then descended in one hour to La Chiandola, a romantic village situated at the brink of a thundering torrent, and adorned by cascades gushing from jagged rocks, fome thousand feet high; we dined at La Chiandola, where the inn is tolerably good, and then proceeded to Tende. To describe the road between this town and La Chiandola is impossible, neither do I think it in the power of imagination to picture fuch feenery as we beheld. All I can fav is, that we ascended gradually by the side of a magnificent torrent, which by rushing impetuously over immense blocks of marble, forms itself into an endless variety of cascades; while the stupendous rocks through which this road is pierced, from their immense height, grotesque shapes, and verdant clothing, added to the beautiful waterfalls with which they are decorated, present the most awfully magnificent grotto that the masterly hand of nature ever formed. Through this grotto we travelled for a confiderable number of miles between mountains whose fummits the eye cannot reach, when fuddenly denly we beheld suspended in the air, (for fuch really was it's appearance,) a large fortified castle; and soon afterwards, on turning a point, we discovered the town of Saorgio, built in the form of an amphitheatre, and apparently hanging between earth and heaven; while the lower part of the rocks exhibited fuch stately woods of chestnuttrees as, to English travellers, appear equally beautiful and extraordinary:* after this, we were continually presented with convents, hermitages, remains of castles, and old Roman causeys, till our arrival at Tende, which is fituated under an immense Alp of the fame name, computed to be 8000 feet high, and over the fummit of which lies the road. Tende is a difmal looking town, refembling what Poetry would picture as the world's end; for the lofty mountain behind it feems to fay; "Thou shalt proceed no farther."

B 2

and

В з

The

* The Fortress of Saorgio entirely commands the just-described pass.

The inn here is a crazy hovel, containing scarcely one whole window, and no sittingroom, except that which ferves in common for Postillions, Porters, Gentlemen, poultry, and hogs: here, however, we were compelled to fleep; and no fooner had we alighted from our carriage, than the Director of the Mountain, and the Commandant of the Town, both came to us, defiring we would pass the Col-de-Tende early next morning, because, at mid-day there generally rises a wind very inconvenient to Travellers; accordingly, at eight o'clock we fet out, after having endeavoured to guard ourselves from cold by fur caps, warm great-coats, and half-boots lined with hare-skin. One of our party being an Invalid, was carried by eight porters in a close chair, (the only one upon the station, and given to the Director by the Dutchess Dowager of ANCASTER;) this chair, however, has no bottom, a very unpleasant circumstance, as when the Por-

ters

ters rest themselves, the Traveller is set down upon the fnow; but this inconvenience cannot eafily be avoided, for, were the chairs made with bottoms, they would be too heavy for the Porters, and therefore dangerous in fudden gufts of wind. The rest of our party went upon mules, or in open chairs, each chair being carried by fix Men; while our coach was drawn empty over the mountain by the Voiturin's horses, and our baggage carried upon mules. We were three hours and a quarter in ascending the Col-de-Tende, and one hour and three quarters in descending. The path through which we were conducted was steep, but fafe, and shorter than the coach-road; the prospects are picturesque and embellished with bold cascades. When we had proceeded about three parts up the mountain it became very cold, and, at this time, we perceived, by the fog, that we were passing the clouds, which on reaching the fummit, we found ourselves considerably above; and, here, the cold was scarcely supportable. The top of this vast mountain exhibits a barren rock, from whence we descried Alps still more losty, and, at our seet, the village of Limoni, situated in a fruitful valley, through which rushes a torrent formed by snow from the Col. As our coach was eight hours in passing this Alp, we were obliged to sleep at Limoni, where there is, however, a tolerable inn.

B 4 found

The just-described road was made at the expence of the present King of Sardinia, and completed in seventeen years; it was opened in 1785, and may certainly vie with, if it does not surpass any ancient Roman road in point of magnificence.

From Limoni we fet out at fix in the morning, and drove through a narrow, rough road, near the bed of a torrent, till, on approaching Coni, we entered a luxuriant plain, furrounded by which stands the last-ramed named Town, whose fortifications are so strong that like Saorgio it is deemed impregnable. After dining at Coni we proceeded to Savigliano, and were much struck with the change of country; rich and tame cultivation succeeding to the sublime and beautiful wildness of the Alps; on one side, however, we still discovered Gotho and St. Bernard, rising majestically above the clouds.

We flept at Savigliano, rather a large Town, where the inn is tolerably good. Next morning we proceeded to Carignano, through one of the richest countries I ever saw; and, after dinner, drove on to Turin. This City is approached by four noble roads, shaded with double rows of stately trees, while the surrounding hills are covered with handsome edifices, and the plain loaded with mulberries, vines, and corn. The fortifications are very strong, and the City itself clean and elegant. The Strada-del-Po, the great Piazza, and the regal Palace, particularly deferve ferve attention; as do the University, the Library, and the great Theatre, which is one of the finest in Europe. There are several inns at Turin, but l'Auberge royale is deemed the best.

From hence to Geneva we proceeded en voiturier, paying for the same number of horses as before, 43 louis-d'ors, the buonamano, the passage of Mount-Cenis, and expenses at inns inclusive.

Our first stage was St. Ambrogio, a little village, the road to which is tolerably good; the country, for the first few miles, rich but tame; afterwards woody and mountainous: we observed two or three old fortresses on the heights, and passed through an uninhabited Town nearly buried by fallen rocks. The inn at St. Ambrogio is bad: after dining here, we proceeded to Novaleja, our road lying for some miles through the dry bed of a torrent, where all the stones and sand resembled silver: after this, we came -to Susa, a large Town built on the summit of a small Alp, and defended by the famous Fortress of La Brunetta, which is deemed impregnable: from hence to Novalesa we were immured between mountains fo high that the fun seemed to set at six in the evening, though it was the middle of June; and here we observed more Persons afflicted with the goêtres, at least the disorder appeared more violent than in other vallies of the Alps; indeed one poor Wretch, who came to folicit charity, feemed fcarcely able to articulate a fingle word, fo dreadfully fwelled was his throat—we asked the Natives to what cause they attributed this complaint, and were told, that it originated from the chill the throat continually receives in confequence of the excessive coldness of the water, which is, generally speaking, the only beverage these poor People can command; for most wretched is the situation of the mountaineer-Peafantry, infomuch that they can can neither purchase clothes sufficient to defend them from the rigours of their climate, nor any fustenance except bread and the fish of the lakes and torrents; nay, even falt, the only cordial within their reach, cannot be univerfally attained, on account of the heavy tax his Sardinian Majesty has lain upon it. We found great difficulty in difcerning the tops of any of the mountains between Suza and Novalesa, though sometimes, indeed, a piece of fnow, which we guessed to be the summit of an Alp, appeared hanging as it were in the fky; but the clouds always refted upon, and eclipfed, the middle part. When we came within view of Cenis, which rifes directly over Novalcía, we felt a little queer at the thought of passing it; however, as there was no alternative but that of returning over the Col-de-Tende, a still more formidable Alp, we were conftrained to reconcile ourselves to our fate. Novalesa contains two tolerably rably good inns, and no fooner had we reached one of them than the Cenis-Porters came to enquire, how many mules and Men we should want for the passage of the mountain, and likewise to take our coach to pieces that it might be placed on the backs of mules: the Director then followed to ask at what hour in the morning we defigned to continue our journey; and, wishing to pass the top of the mountain about noon, we appointed nine o'clock. We were next accosted by a troop of Mulcteers, who enquired at what hour the baggage was to fet out, and upon my answering, "At five o'clock;" they replied, That, as the next day was Sunday, I must pay a Priest for saving mass to them at four, or they would not go at five; this was agreed to; and I now, in the way to my bed-room, croffed the hall of the inn, where I beheld about twenty People employed in dividing the body of our coach from the carriage, taking off every wheel.

14 LETTERS FROM ITALY;

wheel, pulling out every fcrew, and feparating the perch into four pieces; while our Courier was lifting up his hands and eyes. and predicting that at least half the small things would be loft. Next morning the fun shone upon us, (a most desirable circumstance to Persons who scale the Alps,) and at our appointed time we fallied forth. The passage over Cenis is rendered convenient by means of fedan-chairs, close and warm like those used in England; each being carried either by fix or eight Porters, according to the weight of the Person within-fide: there likewise are open chairs, each being carried by four Porters; and Travellers who choose to ride, may be provided with fafe mules. The foot of the mountain is covered with pasturages, watered by cascades, and adorned with woods of firs, larches, and chestnuts; the path for the chairs and mules is cut in a zig-zag form, and, though very steep, cannot be called dangerous.

dangerous. After ascending about half a mile we were presented with a fine view of Roche-Melon, one of the loftiest of the great Alps, and, towards the top, a perfect glacier, though, on it's fummit, is a chapel, where, on the 5th of August a fête is annually celebrated, to attend which the People scale this terrific mountain by means of iron spikes fixed in their shoes. After ascending about five miles we came to a finall village where the Inhabitants looked unhealthy, and here it began to grow cold; we now passed a cascade, whose waters fall from fuch a height that the vapour rifing from them wets nearly as much as a shower. of rain; and, contiguous to this cascade, is a long covered way, through which Travellers are conducted during winter. After ascending about seven miles, we entered the valley of St. Nicholas, which divides Piedmont from Savoy; and here, we beheld another and a more beautiful cascade, formed by an immense Lake on the top of Cenis, and rushing impetuously into Lake Minor, which embellishes the just-named valley. After ascending about nine miles, we reached a plain, on what is called the fummit of the mountain, though above this plain rife rocks three thousand feet high; Travellers, however, do not pass over them. We had now gained a height of between fix and feven thousand feet, and found ourselves in a thick, wet fog, through which we could scarcely distinguish the Lake, a noble sheet of water, faid to be unfathomable, and containing the finest trout in the world. There is an inn upon the plain, and likewise a Convent, or Hermitage, named l'Hopital, which receives Travellers; we stopped at the latter, where we found a dinner, confisting of every eatable the mountain produces, provided for us, and, what was better still in fo cold a fituation, good wine, the produce of the mountain likewise, and a large fire. The

bу

The Dutchess Dowager of A******, (whose universal benevolence adds dignity to her high rank), knowing how great an Invalid one of my Family is, and having in her suite a skilful English Physician, gave us the comfort of being able to confult him in case of necessity, by permitting us to accompany her from Turin to Geneva; our two Families united, therefore, (reckoning the Porters and Guides attending upon each), amounted to fifty-four Perfons who stopped at l'Hopital; and yet, notwithstanding the inaccessible situation of this Hermitage, our dinner was as good, plentiful, and even elegant, as it could possibly have been in a populous City. With the defert came Children, who brought falvers filled with all the different flowers that enamel Cenis; and after making a present to them, and the hospitable Monks of the Hermitage, we continued our journey, mounting for a short time and then descending rapidly, till we Vol. L reached reached Lanslebourg. This fide of Cenis is, less beautiful than the other, as it scarcely exhibits anything but amphitheatres of wood, yet, taking the whole together, there is not perhaps in the world a scene more astonishing or more truly fublime than the passage of this Alp, which is supposed to have been opened by Pompey. From Novalefa to l'Hopital we computed the distance to be near nine miles, and we were three hours in going; from l'Hopital to Lanslebourg about fix miles, and we were two hours in going. On our arrival at Lanslebourg we had the pleasure of finding our coach remounted, with all the baggage put on; and, to the amazement of our Courier, not fo much as a fingle ferew was miffing. The last-named village contains two bad inns, at one of which necessity obliged us to sleep; and while fupper was preparing we went to fee the procession of the Fête de Dieu, which, to our furprize, was really magnificent even in this wild country. Next morning we drove to Modane, through a hilly, narrow, rough road, generally lying near the bed of a torrent, and furrounded with picturesque fcenery. After dining at Modane, we proceeded to St. Jean de Maurienne, one of the largest towns in Savoy, and encircled by Alps apparently higher than Cenis. The road, which runs through a narrow plain, is tolerably good, and the inn at which we flept really comfortable, though we were attended by a Girl who possessed neither shoes nor stockings, and who told us the poverty of the country was fo great that even the commonest fruits were unattainable. Next day we dined at La Chambre, where the inn is tolerable, and then proceeded to Aiguebelle, a large and pleasantly situated village where the mountains begin to leffen, and where we flept at a good inn. Our next stage was Montmélian, and here the sterility of the country so far decreases that the Natives are able to raife grapes, which produce excellent wine. After dining at an indifferent inn, we proceeded to Aix-les-Bains, passing through Chambéry, the capital of Savoy, beautifully fituated in a luxuriant valley bordered with Alps, and faid to contain between seven and eight thousand People. The waters of Aix are much effeemed in Savoy, and the inn is a tolerably good one. Next day we proceeded through Rumilly to Frangy, where there are two good inns, and then drove to GENEVA, or rather to Sécheron, where THE HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE is most excellent. Geneva, said to contain near thirty thousand Inhabitants, is delightfully fituated on the banks of an immense Lake, and possesses environs peculiarly rich and charming, especially to Persons who have just passed the barren mountains of The whole road from St. Jean de Maurienne hither may be called good.

tives

During our refidence at Secheron we took a drive to fee Voltaire's Villa at Ferney, with an account of which I shall close my letter. This house, since the death of its Owner, has had many Masters; but they all have deemed it facrilege to alter any thing, and, confequently, the rooms are furnished just the same as when he died. The first thing which caught my eyes on entering the hall, was a large picture, composed by Voltaire himself, and executed by a wretched Artist whom he met with at Ferney: that Voltaire was the vainest of Men I have always heard, but that any Man could have the overweening vanity to compose such a picture of himfelf is scarcely credible. In the fore-ground stands this celebrated Philosopher, holding The Henriade, which he is presenting to Apollo, who has just descended from Olympus in order to receive it—in the back-ground is the Temple of Memory, towards which flies Fame, at the same time pointing to  $\mathbf{C}$  3 The

The Henriade—the Muses and Graces are furrounding Voltaire, but the latter feem in the act of carrying his buft to the Temple of Memory—the Heroes and Heroines of The Henriade are standing astonished at his wonderful talents: the Authors and Authoresses who wrote against him are falling into the infernal regions, which gape to receive them and their works; while Envy and her Imps are expiring at his feet-the Family of Calas, likewife, is exhibited in this picture. From the hall we entered a handsome faloon, ornamented with a defign. in china for the tomb of a Lady supposed to have died in child-birth, but who was, in fact, buried alive: it represents the Lady and her Child bursting through the tomb, which is broken by the Artist in so natural a manner that one is ready to exclaim; "What a pity it is that this beautiful monument has met with an accident." In Voltaire's bedroom are portraits of his Friends, and the vasc wherein his heart was placed before it's removal to Paris; this monument is of black. marble, plain but neat, and immediately under that part which contained the heart is written; " Mon esprit est partout, et mon cœur est ici:" and over the heart is written in French, (I forget the precise words), "My manes are at peace, because my heart is with You;" alluding, I perfume, to the furrounding portraits, namely, those of Frederic the Great of Pruffia, and Lequain the Player, the late Empress of Russia and Madame Dillon Cramer: Voltaire himself is in the centre, and in various parts of the room are Newton, Milton, and feveral other great Men, both English and French. Lequain's name reminds me of a famous French pun which I cannot refift mentioning, as it pleased me very much. "Une Dame Anglaise disoit un jour, que le Théatre Français C 4 avoit avoit beaucoup perdu en perdant le célebre Lequain. Mais, dit un Français, qui se trouvoit dans cette compagnie, nous avons encore parmi nous l'esprit, et le merite de Lequain. Comment cela? repliqua l'Anglaise. C'est, reprit le Française, que Lequain, avant de traverser le sleuve, a quitté ses talens sur la rive."

room

LETTER

LETTER II.

Nice, October 1792.

YOU will think us very unfortunate in having just reached Nice to see it captured; and you will, no doubt, be anxious to learn particulars.

During our residence in Switzerland we heard rumours of an approaching war between France and his Sardinian Majesty; and as many of the Emigrants who resorted last winter to Nice were in sact Republicans sent to disseminate revolutionary principles among the People, we dreaded the event of such a war; especially as we had recently witnessed the misery of Savoy under the existing government, and too well knew the specious offers made by France to every Nation who complained either of real or imaginary grievances. We had likewise been told, told, that the Sovereign of Sardinia, though good and amiable, was misled by priestcraft, and frequently betrayed by those in whom he confided; however, as we had feen the natural fortifications of Piedmont and Savoy (described in my last letter), together with those fortresses so placed by human wisdom as to make it feem impossible for any hostile Army to penetrate through this passage of the Alps; and as we also knew that Nice was garrifoned by 7000 Piedmontese Troops, and divided from France by a torrent called the Var, always terrific and frequently impassable, we ventured to set out on our return to this City, taking the precaution to request, that the British Conful of Nice would lodge a letter for us at Turin, mentioning whether we might or might not proceed in fafety.

Having learnt from experience how tedious and expensive it is to travel en voiturier through Piedmont and Savoy, we now determined termined to go post to Turin, and therefore fent a Messenger from Geneva to Carouge, (the first Town in Savoy), requesting the Commandant of that place to grant us a bolletonne for four draught-horses and one saddle-horse at every post; he immediately complied with our request, desiring us to get the order renewed at Chambéry; and by means of this bolletonne we never paid for above four draught-horses, even when the Post-Masters found it requisite to put on six: and by fending our Courier forward from Bramens to Lanslebourg with a letter to the Director of Cenis, acquainting him with the number of our party, and the fize of our carriage, we found, on our arrival at the last-named town, chairs, mules and Porters all ready, fo that without ten minutes' delay we began to afcend the mountain, reaching Tavernettes (the Cenis post-house) in a couple of hours; here, we stopped to warm ourselves and take refreshment; then proceeding in two

two hours and a half to Novalesa, where our coach and baggage arrived in a couple of hours afterwards. The road over Cenis was at this time so good, that although the body of our carriage was dismounted and suspended between two porter-mules, the wheels were drawn over in the common way without sustaining any injury. The passage of the mountain cost us 184 Piedmontese livres, besides a trisling buona-mano to the Porters, making in all near ten pounds sterling: and the whole of our expense going post amounted to one-third less than when we went en voiturier, besides which we travelled with much more convenience.

As I passed Cenis in an open-chair I conversed a good deal with my Porters: these Men are, generally speaking, intelligent, and but three months since, entertained us with repeating Marmontel's Tales, and other stories almost equally amusing, though now, their only theme was politics, tending to commend commend French government at the expense of their own; and when I alighted at Tavernettes, (which stands nearly on the top of Cenis,) I was eagerly questioned by the Mistress of the house respecting the movements of the republican Armies, and at the same time told, "That Savoy would foon be free." All this alarmed us; and, on our arrival at Turin, we had the mortification of learning, that the letter we expected from the British Consul at Nice was, by mistake, forwarded into Switzerland: however, as it appeared from his advices to our Minister at Turin, that he thought Nice perfeetly fafe, both on account of it's interior force and local fituation, we agreed with a Voiturin to take us thither, fearing it might be difficult to procure a fufficient number of post-horses beyond Tende; and to this Voiturin we gave 15 louis-d'ors, buona-mano not inclusive; we bearing our own expenses at inns, and he paying the passage of the Coldede-Tende, which cost him nothing but extra horses up the mountain, the road being at this time so good, that we sound it need-less either to unload the carriage or go in chairs ourselves.

We arrived at Nice the 22d of September; but finding almost every lodging-house without the walls occupied by Piedmontese-Soldiers, a camp formed on the banks of the Var, new batteries erected and erecting, and an appearance of fmothered apprehension about many of the People, we began to think of hiring a felucca and going to Genoa; however, we were affured; "There could be no danger in staying to recover from the fatigue of our late journey, that there were not 500 effective troops in all the fouthern provinces of France, that by land Nice was fecurely guarded, and that even if an attack were made by fea, we might eafily escape long before a landing could take place."

Thus

Thus lulled into a state of fancied security, we resolved to wait the event of a few days at an hotel within the City-walls; and on Sunday the 23d nothing occurred to make us repent this resolution; but, on the 24th, I remarked that the Jews were going away, and many other People, particularly the French Emigrants, packing up. On the 25th the BISHOP OF NICE, (one of the most amiable and respectable of Men,) called to tell us, "That, by the fignals, a large fleet was in fight, and he hoped it might prove the Ruffians coming to defend us:"but this hope was fallacious; for, on the 26th, many ships approached near enough to shew that they were French; though an opinion prevailed of their not being in a condition to attack Nice: nevertheless, on the 27th, an universal panic seized all ranks of people, occasioned chiefly, however, by a proclamation issued by Government, obliging every person who possessed either horses or mules to relinquish them for the King's fervice. Thus all hopes of escaping by land were blasted; and, on the morning of the 28th, the first object which struck our eyes was the French fleet, confisting of about fixteen fail of the line, and standing off and on near the port. I immediately went to the quay, with an intention of hiring an English Merchantman (our nation being at peace with France,) and getting my Family and Friends embarked before the City was bombarded, a circumstance which we hourly expected to take place: but no English vesfel could I find ready for fea, though I engaged one to convey us to Genoa the moment her Captain could procure ballast; for, in a Nissard-felucca we durst not venture, left she should have been funk by the ene-On coming back from the port 1 learnt, to my extreme furprize, that the King of Sardinia had that moment fent an express from Turin, ordering all his Troops to withdraw as fast as possible, and abandon Nice: from what motive such a command could have originated it was impossible to guess, but the consternation it produced among the People beggars all description; and too just was their cause for alarm, as the Sardinian government had not only received and sheltered at Nice some thousands of the most obnoxious French Loyalists, but likewife banished or imprisoned many of the Republicans, confequently, there was great reason to dread revenge. For three or sour hours, an awful interval of time, Nice waited in filent expectation of her fate, while the French Emigrants fled on foot over the Alps, the Piedmontese and Nissard Nobility either followed this example, or employed themselves in burying their property, and the Sardinian Troops coolly marched away, headed by the Commandant, and accompanied by every other military Vol. I. Officer. D

ì

Officer, one excepted:* and when I returned to our Hotel, I learnt, that some Officers quartered there had been packing up on the preceding night, though the order for evacuating Nice did not arrive till morning.

The French fleet gradually advanced, and at length formed itself into a line before the harbour, at the same time sending off a boat with a slag of truce; and repeatedly did the Persons in this boat demand a parley before the terrified Nissards made any proper answer; at last, however, a boat was dispatched from the quay with the colours of the Town, upon which the French Messengers proceeded to shore, and required the immediate emancipation of their Conful, who had recently been arrested by the Sardinian government: and the sew civil Magistrates remaining at Nice (for most of these Gentlemen

* The Chevalier de Saluggio, Covernor of Mont-Albano, themen had fled) not only complied with this request, but, at the same time, resigned their City into the hands of France, even before such a surrender had been demanded.

An account of this event was instantly dispatched to Antibes; while the French Conful went in triumph to the fleet; and another interval of fome hours took place ere we knew what to expect from our Conquerors. Meantime the Galley-Slaves, now left unguarded, struck off each others' fetters, and became the dread of the whole City, infomuch that the arrival of French Troops was anticipated as a bleffing; towards night, however, a few Republican Officers came from Antibes to fay, "That as the furrender of Nice was unlooked for on their part, their Army could not be collected to march in till the next evening;" and no fooner had this been fignified than the Chevalier de SA-LUGGIO called upon us to defire, that our doors might be barricaded, and our Family D 2 prepared prepared for flight, as strong apprehensions were entertained lest the Galley-Slaves should plunder the City, and murder many of it's Inhabitants. This worthy Man added, "That he had pointed out the danger to the Commandant; and earnestly petitioned for a handful of Troops, merely to keep order till the French arrived, but his request had been refused." Such a refusal appeared inexplicable; though the enigma was eafily folved when we understood, that the blind security of Government in the first instance, the order for withdrawing the Troops in the fecond, and the precipitate furrender of Nice in the third, was all the work of Treachery; nay, fo daringly had the base Betrayers of their country acted, that every battery they pretended to erect for it's defence was fo placed as to be absolutely useless; while Mont-Albano, the only fpot which could have been eafily and strongly fortified, was, in spite of it's Governor's remonstrances, totally tally neglected.* We, of course, sat up all night, as, I believe, did every other Family; and, happily for us all, the booty sound by the Plunderers in empty habitations surnished them with full employment till morning, when, almost every remaining Person of rank who had strength to walk, sled into the Alps; and truly melancholy it was to see decrepit Age and helpless Infancy toiling, for the first time in their lives, up stony mountains, exposed to the baleful rays of a scorching sun, and loaded with money, plate, and other valuables, under the burden of which they continually sunk.

We now heard that feveral bodies of French Troops were croffing the Var; and, on the afternoon of the 20th, a column, confifting of ten thousand Men entered,

* On the very day after the French entered, they began to fortify Mont-Albano, conveying thicher with unremitting labour an hundred pieces of cannon, which they found ready charged upon the walls of Nice.

D 3 Nice,

`1

Nice, preceded by Women carrying battleaxes, an olive-branch, and the national colours crowned with the cap of liberty, and commanded by GENERAL ANSELM, who stopped at the gate to harangue and comfort the trembling Nissards by assurances of intended mercy and protection. When this fpeech was ended, and the confequent acclamations had ceased, the Troops marched round the ramparts with the utmost quietude and good order, faluting the arms of England as they passed the house of our Conful, and forbearing to utter a fingle word that could either humiliate or alarm the conquered People. We, however, did not pass the night in tranquillity, because, as we fat at supper, the noise of breaking open empty houses, that Soldiers might be quartered in them, continually affailed our ears, while the probability that our vacant rooms might be appropriated to the same use, filled us with serious apprehensions; morcover, moreover, the hubbub in the streets was terrific; and, next morning, we learnt, that Nice had been threatened, about midnight, with a most imminent danger; for, on a pistol being heard to go off in the Place Victoire, the Troops took an immediate alarm, fupposing it a fignal for the Picdmontese Regiments, (whom they believed still in ambush near the Town,) to fall upon and massacre them; and, enraged by this imaginary treachery, they resolved to burn us all in our beds, and were actually fallying forth on the expedition, when Anselm's eloquence appeared their wrath, and thus preserved the City and it's innocent Inhabitants.

Upon receiving this information we lost no time in applying to the Commandant of the town for leave to ship our baggage on board an English vessel, and likewise to embark ourselves, whenever that vessel should be ready for sea: he immediately came to us, wrote the passport we solicited, assuring us, however, of his wish to maintain good order, promising us a constant guard of 20 Men, selected from his own Regiment, while we staid; but, at the same time advising our prompt departure; and further, he recommended us to the especial care of his Soldiers, and directed them to assist our Servants in conveying our parriage, &c. to the ship: he also granted a Guard to every other English Family at Nice.

D 4 us,

So far the French acted liberally; but I must now mention a circumstance which disgraced them, while it gave pain to every lover of virtue. When Nice was to be taken possession of in the name of the Republic, it was required that the keys should be given up in form, and as every Piedmontese and Nissard-Officer, both military and civil, had now disappeared, the BISHOP (who, spite of repeated solicitations, resuled to fly, declaring, he would remain to watch his Flock till forced from them,) was now called upon to perform the above-named ceremony; he obeyed, taking with him two or three of his own Chaplains, one of whom addressed him as Monseigneur; upon hearing which, the French General proudly exclaimed; "Il n'y a plus des Monseigneurs! Monfieur l'Abbé, s'il vous plait:" and then turning to the BISHOP, whose cross hung fuspended on his breast, he bade him throw away that bauble, and take the civic oath. The BISHOP indignantly refused; upon which he was defired to quit the City. On returning to his palace he fainted; but, foon recovering himself, set out on foot, in a pelting rain, for Turin, where, however, he arrived in fafety.

Between the 20th of last month and the 5th of this, French Troops, to the number I believe of 25,000, had reinforced those already in the town; and as most of the Regiments giments were raw, turbulent and rapacious, our fituation was extremely unpleasant, notwithstanding the protection afforded us by the Commandant; we therefore entreated the Captain of our merchantman to make all possible dispatch in preparing her for sea; and after depositing our own baggage on board, we were fortunate enough to get off many valuables for our Friends: but as the English Conful now determined to leave Nice in a few days, and our veffel was the one in harbour at all prepared to fail, he ordered her to wait for him. On the 4th instant, however, the Captain rejoiced us by faying, "That the Conful was ready, and we might come on board next morning;" but, when that period arrived, he called to inform us, "That an unexpected embargo had been put on all the shipping:" this was alarming information, as we knew not what might come next; however, on the

the 6th we heard, that our Minister at Turin,* (ever folicitous for the welfare of his fellow-Subjects,) had fent a frigate to convey us all to Genoa: our spirits now revived; but this gleam of fun-shine was speedily obfcured by the mortifying intelligence, that circumstances had arisen which obliged the frigate to fail away: another day, therefore, was fpent in apprehension: but, on the 8th our Captain came with looks of joy to announce "That the embargo was taken off;" we therefore prepared to embark, and being advifed to make as little parade as poffible on our way to the port, my Family went two and two by different paths, while I, being obliged to flay to the last, walked down, dreffed as a Servant, paffing all the French posts without the smallest molestation; indeed, so civil were the Soldiers, that when I reached the water's edge they called a boat to convey me to the ship. Others of the English, however, who went with more parade, did not escape infult, and even found fome difficulty in getting on board. As the Conful and his family were now embarked, we felt extremely anxious to fet fail; but the elements were adverse to our wishes, the wind being fo contrary and the fea fo much agitated, that it was impossible to attempt getting out of harbour. Nothing unpleafant, however, occurred till to-day, when fome English Travellers who, like us, were informed that Nice was in no danger of being captured, had hired a Venetian vessel to convey them hither, and were just entering the port, when, through the aukwardness of their Captain, a Frenchman was killed; multitudes of Soldiers inftantly boarded their veffel, and would have murdered the whole ship's Company, not even sparing the English, if a republican Officer had not preferved their lives at the peril of his own; and though we had nothing to do with this bufiness, finess, the Soldiers, who were now in an illhumour with the British Nation, jumped in confiderable numbers upon our deck, which lay parallel with the shore, swearing we were Aristocrats, and threatening to rob and murder us: at length, however, their Officers appeafed and removed them; but, nevertheless, we deemed it prudent to push of from shore, and likewise to resolve on failing early to-morrow morning, even though the weather should continue boisterous: I shall. therefore, fend this letter to be put into the post by FARAUDY, once our apothecary here, though now metamorphofed into a Leader of the Municipality. This Man, born • a Peafant, but endowed with a vigourous understanding, taught himself English, studied physic according to our mode of practice, and by many years of unwearied affiduity acquired, chiefly from British Travellers, a large fortune; but though he now feems arrived at that period of life when tranquillity tranquillity alone would enable him to enjoy the fruits of his industry, he has been aiming for months past to effect the present change of government at Nice; and this, because he deems it more advantageous for his country to be incorporated with the French Nation than remain as an appendage to the infignificant crown of Sardinia: he forgets, however, that revolutionary changes, though fometimes beneficial to the rifing generation, are always dangerous to those who make them; and must be especially so in the present instance, where, absolute power is committed to a People whose darling tenet is atheifm, and their professed aim universal empire.—You will wonder perhaps at the last part of this sentence, but we have held many conversations lately with French Officers, who scruple not to say, that it is their intention to make Nice a nursery for their troops, who, when properly disciplined and appointed, are to destroy the aristocracy stocracy of Genoa, penetrate over the Maritime-Alps to Turin, dethrone the King of Sardinia, emancipate the Milanese, over-throw the Popedom, revolutionize Naples, subduc Germany, and then, should England quarrel with them, (which they carnestly hope she will not do,) attempt in the last instance to invade, and conquer her.

the

* The Honourable John Trevor.

It must, however, be a considerable time ere any of these darling plans can be executed; and, during the interval, may Piedmont dismiss her traitorous Counsellors, and Genoa prepare for desence!

LETTER

LETTER III.

Pifa, January 1794.

E landed at Genoa on the 14th of October 1792, after a rough voyage; though the confideration of having cfcaped from actual danger reconciled us to gales which were, in themselves, sufficiently violent to intimidate fresh-water Sailors. From Genoa we went by fea to Leghorn, and then proceeded to this City, where, during the winter of 1793, we received an account of the execution, or, more properly fpeaking, the murder of Lewis XVI. an . event which struck all Tuscany with horror, and must, I think, have been particularly afflictive to the crowd of Emigrant-Nobles and Ecclefiaftics who faunter idly up and down the Pifa-quay; for, had they remained in France and supported their unoffending offending Monarch, it seems almost certain he would not have been led to the guillotine. I find, however, that the generality of Nobles and Prelates had long behaved fo ill to Persons beneath them as to sear revenge on the part of those they had injured; and this felfish fear induced them to desert their King, and leave France to the mercy of low men, who, like horses just escaped from their Drivers, fet off full speed on the dangerous road to greatness, trampling Liberty, Justice and Religion under-foot. But, notwithstanding all this, we observed, in the autumn of 1793, the rapid growth of democratic opinions throughout Italy. Republican Troops were gradually stealing upon Genoa, and republican Missionaries, whose power is still more formidable, gradually introducing themselves into her councils; while the false affertion, that all Mon were origihally equal, flattered the pride of the Many, and inclined them to shake off the autho-Vol. I. E rity rity of the Few. At Leghorn it was insinuated, that if Tuscany continued neuter her commerce would become immense and her wealth incalculable. At Pifa, (where democratic Frenchmen, under the specious garb of Loyalists, were daily scen upon the Corfo, walking arm in arm with the young Students,) Liberty, in her most dangerous extent, was called the first of bleffings, and conformity to old-established opinions the mark of a fervile or shallow mind. The abfurdities of the Roman-catholic religion were painted in glowing colours; the licentiousness of it's Priests too justly reprobated, and it's tendency to thicken the veil of ignorance and strengthen the hands of arbitrary power, particularly enlarged upon and regretted; while at Florence Men of science were told, "The Grand Duke had no means of rewarding their talents, but that France was both able and anxious to do it;" at Florence likewise it became a fashion to vaunt vaunt the greatness of the French Republic and diminish the consequence of England, infomuch that a Gentleman, high in station under the Grand Duke, affured me, "The British navy consisted only of a few frigates." In vain did our Minister, Lord HERVEY, point out how necessary it was for the Grand Duke to arm his People, and guard against the encroachments of France; in vain, too, did common-sense second his arguments; Tuscany answered, "That Leopold had annihilated her Militia; that her present military force confifted but of two or three regiments: that France could overwhelm her in a moment; and that her only rational dependence rested on the preservation of a strict neutrality." Add to this, that she was facinated by the hope of rendering Leghorn the Exchange of Italy, and that the councils of Vienna, which govern those of Florence, are by no means untainted with Jacobinism. Lucca, however, whose gates E 2 have have hitherto been shut against Republican Missionaries, seems inclined to arm and defend her frontiers, if her Neighbours will adopt the same prudent measure. But the Romans, though professedly inimical to France, are by no means united in fentiments; for though the common People detest Frenchmen, calling them Heretics and Enemies to the Christian faith, the Literati have been so far seduced by republican doctrines, that the profligacy of the Sacred College, and the weakness and tyranny of it's government, are openly talked of, while Bologna even feems ripe for revolt: and the Neapolitans and Sicilians, though actually at war with France, and possessing a natural antipathy to Frenchmen, are but too much influenced by their opinions; for though the common People love their King, the Lawyers, military Officers, and Nobility, groan under the oppression of his Ministers, lament the corruption which pervades every department of state, and eagerly long for a reform: while Venice, immerfed in diffipation, naturally prone to indolence, and enervated by the heavy yoke of despotism she has long been doomed to wear, scarcely notices the threatening clouds which gather in the West, further than to provide herself a temporary afylum under the deceptious banner of Neutrality. Such, in short, is the supineness of some Italian States, and the revolutionary disposition of others, such the tyranny of many governments, and the corruption which prevails in all, fuch the blindness of Sovereigns, and the treachery of Counfellors, that were it not for Alps which feem to preclude the possibility of invasion, I should think republican Gaul might once more plant her banners in the Roman Capitol, and thus fulfil, in part, the daring plan of conquest which her Leaders formed on entering Nice.

No fooner, however, was our Minister in-E 3 formed formed that Lord Hood had obtained poffession of Toulon, the key of the Mediterranean, and thus, for a time at least, checked the progress of republican ambition, than he once more urged the Court of Florence to abandon her neutrality, and unite with the allied Powers against France: but an earnestness to forward the interest of England had unfortunately led him to reflect upon the Marquis MANFREDINI, (the Sovereign's oldest and most intimate Friend,) attributing to him the partiality shewn by Tuscany in favour of the French: and these reflections, (contained in a circular letter to other foreign Ministers), gave Jacobins a pretence for faying, "That Great Britain treated the Court of Florence in an unbecoming manner;" and strengthened the difposition to neutrality which was before too prevalent. However, on the 8th of October, Lord HERVEY presented a memorial to the Tuscan Secretary of State, informing him, him, "That unless the French Minister, M. DE LA FLOTTE, were immediately fent out of the Grand Duke's dominions, French Jacobins exiled, and their Abettors punished; in short, unless all commerce were prohibited between Tuscany and France, Lord Hood would act offensively against Leghorn, for which Port he had already ordered an English squadron, in conjunction with a detachment from the Spanish fleet, to set fail." A categorical answer was demanded within twelve hours; and the Court of Florence, feeing no alternative between acquiescence and the loss of Leghorn, unwillingly acceeded to term swhich were called unjust and impolitic: and thus was Tuscany constrained to declare herself the Enemy of France: but this declaration produced no attempt to arm her People; and Genoa, spite of every thing that could be urged by our Minister there, persevered in her determination to continue neuter.

E 4

A plan

A plan was now formed to annex Corfica to the crown of Great Britain, for which purpose General Paoli solicited the affistance of an English squadron, which sailed, in consequence, for St. Fiorenzo; and this circumstance produced most unexpected effects; for a Corfican Officer in the French fervice. by name BUONAPARTE, and the Friend of Paoli, finding that General had refolved to place his country under the protection of England, feeling that as a Servant of France he could not with honour concur in the plan, and yet unwilling to oppose the wishes of his Friend, retired to Paris, where he had been educated, and where, through the influence of his Countryman SALICETTI, a powerful Leader in the Directory, he was appointed to affift DUGOMMIER in retaking Toulon.

BUONAPARTE, though only twenty-five years of age, was perhaps the best Engineer in Europe; and as nature had endowed him with

with a brilliant and capacious understanding, an insatiable thirst after knowledge, a peculiarly enterprizing spirit, a presence of mind which always pointed out the right expedient in every emergency, and an invincible courage sounded on the persuasion that a brave Man never falls till his hour is come, but too well justified the recommendation of Salicetti; for, chiefly owing to his skilful exertions, the allied Powers were compelled hastily to relinquish their recently acquired and very important conquest.*

We were at Pisa when this news reached Tuscany, and, strange as it may seem, the French Loyalists here, evidently triumphed in the thought that England no longer held for Lewis XVII. the second sea-port of France.

* After Corfica, in July 1794, was actually annexed to the British Crown, BUONAPARTE signified a wish to enter into our Army, requesting the rank of Major; but, unfortunately, his services were not accepted.

LETTER

LETTER IV.

Florence, July 1796.

THE events which occurred after the loss of Toulon till the year 1794, are too well known in England to need recapitulation; suffice it, therefore, to say, that France, from the capture of Nice to the just-named period, did not openly attack Italy, though her Emissaries, by forming a revolution in the principles of the Italians, gradually paved the way for future conquests.

In 1794, however, General MASSENA, a Nissand by birth, and formerly in the Sardinian fervice, made himself Master of Saorgio, to the amazement of every Person acquainted with the strength of that place, and the wretched state of MASSENA's Troops, who were almost destitute of food, clothes, and and military stores: but money, united with the treacherous disposition of the Piedmontese, and the specious arguments of the French General, supplied the means of conquest, and a golden key opened the gates of a fortress which the best appointed Troops must have assailed in vain: but, notwithstanding this acquisition, a total want of neceffaries, and a pestilential fever, the natural consequence of famine, so much diminished the French Forces both in Piedmont and on the Riva di Genova, that they remained almost wholly inactive till this year, when supplies of corn, which in defiance of the British fleet, arrived safe at Genoa, at length restored the republican Soldiers to some degree of health. Still, however, it feemed very improbable that Troops dejected and enfeebled by fickness, and destitute of horses, cannon, and almost every other finew of war, should soon become formidable to Italy, who, besides the barriers raised by nature for her her defence, had now above two hundred thousand well appointed Soldiers, ready to oppose the aggressions of her Enemies;* and, moreover, the Italian climate had ever proved fatal to French Troops, and the Italian Clergy still possessed sufficient influence over the common People, to render them inimical to a Nation which openly professed it's contempt of the Romish faith. Directory, aware of these obstacles so likely to impede their plan of conquest, and feeling that it required no common genius to inspire their Troops with energy, and provide them in a hostile land with necessaries which their own country could not supply, and without which it would be impossible to fucceed, felected perhaps the only Officer in their fervice capable of furmounting fuch

* The Austrian Troops at this period were said to amount to eighty thousand men—the Sardinian to fixty thousand—and the Neapolitan to seventy thousand; while the Dukes of Parma and Modena surnished the Allies with money and military stores.

difficulties, difficulties, and appointed BUONAPARTE, who had so eminently distinguished himself at Toulon, the General in Chief of this ragged Army, which, added to the disadvantages above-mentioned, did not exceed fifty-fix thousand men.

The adventurous Corfican, at the opening of a campaign which has aftonished all Europe, had no professed Friends among the Italian States, except Genoa, Venice, and Tuscany, whose Duke, in February 1705, declared himself the Ally of France. It was therefore necessary that this modern Brennus should be equally political, prudent, and valorous; it was necessary, (to use his own words,) that his troops, though destitute of every thing, should overcome all things; that they should gain battles without cannon, pass rivers without bridges, perform forced marches without shoes, without brandy, and sometimes without bread;

nay

nay more, that they should be animated with fuch a love of glory as might guard them from that inclination for plunder and felf-indulgence, fo natural to Troops who had long fuffered the most cruel privations on the sterile rocks of the Riva di Genova: and, above all, that they should so behave in every captured City as to gain the applause of the vanquished People, and incline the Citizens of other countries to open their gates. A Man of moderate talents would have been discouraged by these numerous difficulties, but BUONAPARTE only thought of overcoming them: "If conquered, (cried he,) I cannot have too little to lofe: and if Conqueror, I can supply mysclf with every thing:" and fo great was his influence over necessitous Troops, so strict the discipline he established among them, that robbery never blasted their laurels without being punished by death; and so orderly was their beha-VIONE

viour in captured Cities, that the approach of French Armies foon ceased, in the eyes of Italy, to be an object of dread.*

BUONAPARTE'S way, however, was in fome measure smoothed by treachery, as republican Emissaries, the most successful of whom was a Neapolitan named VITAGLIANI, had long been employed in concerting with the Piedmontese a plan to annex all his Sardinian Majesty's dominions to those of France; and VITAGLIANI had actually persuaded the Democrats of Ceva, Mondovi, Acqui, and other places, to supply the French Forces in the Maritime-Alps

- * I do not mean to infer from hence that private robberies were not committed; but it was Commissaries chiefly who committed them, while BUONAPARTE commanded the French army.
- † This Man is faid to have gone four times to Turin, (disguised as a Monk or a Muleteer) to consult with the Democrats of that City; and, sensible of the dangerous part he was playing, he constantly wore in his amulet a dose of poison sufficient to secure him from an ignominious death.

with

with nine hundred mules and nearly as many horses, to enable them to open this year's campaign. BUONAPARTE, therefore, had reason to flatter himself that partial revolt. and universal disaffection to the Sardinian government, might facilitate the accomplishment of his schemes against Piedmont, and at length enable him to penetrate into the fertile plains of Lombardy, whither VITAG-LIANI, with other democratic Missionaries, was already gone to propagate revolutionary doctrines. He likewise possessed a powerful though a fecret friend at Rome, in Duke Braschi, the Pope's Nephew, who, for the lucre of gain, had engaged to feed and clothe the French Army; and another Friend in the Arch-Duke of Milan, who, from the fame motive, promifed to be equally liberal.

Thus, aided by Italian treachery, did the Republicans commence this memorable campaign, which opened with the defeat of the the Austro-Sardinian Troops about forty miles from Turin; 14,000 being either killed or taken, and their cannon and campequipage seized.

The army of Lombardy, commanded by General BEAULIEU, and occupying the heights above Genoa, likewise experienced a severe defeat at Montenotte, owing to the skilful manœuvres of BUONAPARTE, seconded by the bravery of LA HARPE, MAS-SENA, &c .-- and in the hard-fought battle of Millessimo, which immediately followed, the Austrian General, PROVERA, was taken, feveral magazines, forty field-pieces, with a large number of horses, mules, and baggage-waggons, falling into the hands of the Victors; while 25,000 of the Austrians and Piedmontese were computed to be killed, and 8000 made prisoners: and this advantage was the more important, because it furnished the French with provisions and military stores.

Vol. I.

F

Next

ì

Next followed the combat of Dego, in which victory, though for some time doubtful, at length declared herself so much in favour of France, that BEAULIEU's communication with the Piedmontese Army was cut off—a fatal stroke to the King of Sardinia! The forces of this Monarch, commanded by General Colli, had intrenched themselves under Ceva, and were attacked without delay by the Republicans, who, after meeting with a vigorous resistance, compelled them to retreat, and then invested the citadel of Ceva, at the fame time advancing to re-attack their flying enemics; but finding them stationed near Mondovi, on a spot furrounded by two deep and rapid rivers, whose banks were strongly fortified with cannon, BUONAPARTE fought, by various manœuvres, to make them choose a less formidable position, and Coll, fearful perhaps of risking a battle on which the fate of Piedmont might depend, retreated two hours hours after midnight to Mondovi, leavinghis artillery behind him: at day-break, however, he was compelled to engage, and after losing in killed and prisoners 1800 men, he retired to a post between Coni and Cherasco, which he was foon conftrained to abandon, again leaving behind him feveral pieces of cannon, with confiderable magazines, most valuable acquifitions to the Victors! who, after precipitating themselves like a torrent from the fummits of the Alps, supporting incredible fatigues, and fighting almost daily battles, (in which fell many of their bravest officers) were now arrived, in one fortnight after their outset, within nine leagues of Turin.

At this period Fossano and Alba submitted to France, while the aged Monarch of Sardinia, surrounded by Jacobin Counsellors, and shamefully deserted by his rebellious Subjects, was compelled to sue for a suspension of arms, which BUONAPARTE F 2 granted granted on condition, "That the fortresses Ceva, Coni, and Tortona, should be ceded to France till the conclusion of a permanent peace, and Alexandria likewise occupied by French Troops till Tortona could be evacuated by the Piedmontese:" and yet, at this very moment, when the unfortunate King agreed to relinquish Coni, an impregnable fortress, and the key of Turin, Buonaparte, as I am credibly informed, had not three rounds of powder remaining in his camp, nor any artillery proper for carrying on a regular siege.

No fooner were Coni and Ceva ceded to France, than BUONAPARTE, on hearing that BEAULIEU had fled towards Alexandria, immediately marched thither, and arrived in time to seize considerable magazines belonging to the Austrians: he then took possession of Tortona, and had the pleasure of finding there above an hundred large new brass cannon, with an immense quantity of military military stores; Ceva and Coni likewise were found in a most respectable state of defence, and so well provided with every necessary as to surnish the French Troops with ample means to pursue their conquests.

Great difficulties, however, still remained to be furmounted; as the imperial Army, stationed on the opposite banks of the Po, might, by choosing an advantageous position, eafily and effectually dispute the pasfage of that river. The great object, therefore, was to deceive BEAULIEU respecting the place where this passage would be attempted; for which purpose an article had been inferted in the armiftice with the King of Sardinia, specifying, "That the French should be at liberty to cross the Po under Valenza; while an order was given for the Neapolitans who garrifoned that town to evacuate it and join the Imperialists. Other stratagems were likewise used to mislead BEAULIEU, while BUONAPARTE, by a F 3 forced forced march, arrived during night at Castel S. Giovanni, reconnoitred the banks of the Po, seized five Austrian barges loaded with rice, medicines, and invalid Soldiers, and then proceeded early next morning to Placenza, from whence, aided by the captured barges, he transported himself, with 5000 Grenadiers and 1500 horse, to the opposite shore, meeting with no resistance except what was given by two squadrons of Husfars, who, after firing a few times, retired: and the rest of the French Army, which had rapidly followed its Leader, likewise passed the river during the course of the day.

No fooner was this important passage effected than BUONAPARTE deseated a body of Austrians, who had been sent too late to oppose his landing; and then granted an armistice to the Duke of Parma, who was constrained to furnish him with two millions of French livres in money, or bills of exchange on Genoa, twelve hundred draughtangers, horses, with their proper harness, four hundred dragoon horses, with saddles and bridles, one hundred chargers for superior officers, and twenty pictures, to be selected by Buo-NAPARTE,* besides corn and bullocks for the use of the Troops.

Meantime BEAULIEU had drawn up his Forces behind the Adda, and fortified, with thirty pieces of ordnance, a long bridge, in front of which was the town of Lodi, defended by his advanced posts; these Buonaparte attacked, and, after a sharp contest, drove into the town, from whence they passed the bridge, and joined the main-body of their Army. A battalion of French Grenadiers, who had hitherto borne down all before them, now reached the bridge, shouting, "Vive la Republique;" but the dreadful fire kept up by the Enemy having stopped their progress, Generals BERTHIER,

F 4

Mas-

* Among the selected pictures was the famous St. Jerome of Corregio.

Massena, Cervoni, &c. rushed forward; still, however, even their presence might have proved ineffectual, had it not been for the gallantry of BUONAPARTE, who, fnatching a standard from the hand of a Subaltern, placed himself in front, animating his Soldiers by his actions and gesticulations, for his voice was drowned by the noise of musquetry and cannon, till these intrepid Fellows, led on by their beloved Commander, paffed the bridge, midst showers of cannonballs, filencing the artillery, and throwing the main-body of BEAULIEU's Forces into fuch disorder, that he fled with precipitation towards Mantua, having lost in this action twenty field-pieces, and, in killed, wounded, and prisoners, above 2000 men.*

A victory fo brilliant was naturally followed by the most important consequences;

Pizzighitone,

* BUONAPARTE's artillery, in this famous battle of Lodi, was drawn by the coach-horses of the Nobility of Placenza.

1

Pizzighitone, Cozmona, Pavia, and Milan, fubmitting to the Conqueror, who was hereby furnished with immense resources, vast magazines, and many valuable works of art.* From this moment, indeed, he became Master of Lombardy, though the citadel of Milan still held out. And now, while he allowed his Troops a short cessation from the toils of conquest, he concluded with the King of Sardinia a peace, by which the latter ceded for ever to the French Nation, Savoy, and the counties of Nice, Tende, and Breuil, refigning to them till there should be a general peace, Coni, Ceva, Tortona, Exiles, Assiette, Suza, La Brunette, Château-Dauphin, and Alexandria, together with all the territory occupied by the republican Troops, making the above-named places liable to levies of military contributions; in short, reserving to himself nothing but the empty name of Sovereign.*

* Among these were above thirty pictures; an Etruscan vase; a manuscript written on the papyrus, and above eleven hundred years old; a Virgil which belonged to Petrarch, containing notes in his own hand, and another curious manuscript relative to the history of the Popes.

After disposing every thing for an attack upon the citadel of Milan, BUONAPARTE, with his usual expedition, advanced to Modena, whose Duke had already retired to Venice, carrying with him twenty-three millions of sequins, the fruits of that insatiate avarice which has always been the failing of this Prince. The republican General, however, informed the Regency appointed to govern during their Sovereign's absence, "That France would only accord him an armistice on condition of his immediately paying her seven millions and a half of French livres in money, and two millions

and

* The fortifications of Suza, La Brunette, and other strong places, were, according to this treaty, to be demolished by the King of Sardinia, and his artillery employed for the service of the French Republic.

and a half in military stores, besides presenting her with twenty of his best pictures, to be selected by French Commissaries." These conditions were accepted.

But though BUONAPARTE, from the opening of the campaign till the present moment, had been daily acquiring fresh laurels, though the speciousness of his proclamations and the good conduct of his Troops induced a large majority of the vanquished People to consider him as a Deliverer not a Conqueror; though Austrian Armies no longer opposed his progress, and Italian Potentates sued to him for peace, a new and formidable Enemy, shrowded in Religion's mantle, and brandishing a crucifix in one hand and a dagger in the other, now threatended to impede that rapid tide of victory which hitherto had borne down all before it; for no fooner did he quit the capital of Lombardy, in order to purfue the flying columns of BEAULIEU, than reports were spread by Monks

′

Monks and other Ecclefiaftics of the English having captured Nice, of Conde's Army being arrived on the confines of the Milanese, and of the Austrians being reinforced, and actually advancing towards Milan; and by fallacies such as these were ignorant and fanatical People excited to take up arms against France, to affaffinate her Troops wherever they met them, to cut down the tree of liberty, and trample the national cockade under foot. BUONAPARTE, however, quickly returned to Milan, shot all the Insurgents who were found with arms in their hands. demanded a large number of Hostages, and fignified to the Ecclesiastics and Nobility, "That their lives should answer for any future violation of the peace." He then proceeded to Bignasco, where seven or eight hundred Peasants had been worked up by their Priests to oppose him; but these unfortunate People were quickly killed or difperfed, while the French Commander, (with tears tears in his eyes, if we may believe his own words), ordered their village to be burnt to the ground; hoping, by this act of severity, to prevent revolt in future. He then proceeded to Pavia, whose Inhabitants, aided by five or fix thousand Peasants, had invested the citadel, made the French Garrison Prisoners, and put the town in a posture of defence. BUONAPARTE, after a few difcharges of cannon, fummoned the Infurgents to furrender and confide in the generofity of France; but was answered; "That while Pavia had walls remaining, her Citizens would defend them." The gates were now forced, and the Infurgents routed, many of them taking refuge in their cellars, while others ran to the tops of their houses and hurled down tiles upon the republican Troops, hoping with fuch feeble weapons to dispute the passage of the streets. At this moment the French who had been imprifoned broke their chains and hastened to the the aid of their General, who immediately ordered every Soldiers' name to be called over, declaring, "That if the blood of one Frenchman had been shed, he would raze the City to the ground, and erect a column on it's ruins, faying, Here once flood Pavia." Happily for the town, however, not one of the Garrison was missing; and BUONA-PARTE therefore contented himself with condemning the Municipality to be shot, and demanding two hundred Hostages, whom he fent to Paris: and thus ended this dangerous infurrection, which, had it been feconded by Austrian Troops, might probably have terminated in a very different manner; though the severe punishment inflicted upon Bignasco, and all the Leaders of the revolt, added to many wife precautions taken by BUONAPARTE, not only restored tranquillity for the present, but ensured obedience to French government in future.

This business settled, the Republic of Venice

nice was informed by a proclamation, that the French Troops in their pursuit of BEAU-LIEU would pass her territories, maintaining, however, the strictest discipline, and paying for every thing they might want. The last-named General, in consequence of his defeat at Lodi, had judged it prudent to retire behind the Mincio, where he took an excellent position, between Mantua and the Lake of Garda, his great object now being to defend the passage of the Mincio, for which purpose the banks of that river were lined with cannon. BUONAPARTE, however, by means of feveral skilful manœuvres, deceived BEAULIEU as to the place where he designed crossing, and then marched rapidly towards Borghetto, the approach to which Town was defended by the Austrian advanced Guard, confifting of four or five thousand Men, who, finding themselves unable to withstand the attack of the French Cavalry, retired over a bridge leading to the opposite opposite shore of the Mincio, breaking down one arch, and then planting artillery to prevent their Opponents from repairing it. At this moment fifty French Grenadiers, led by General Gardanne, plunged into the water, which was neck deep, and, placing their muskets on their heads, waded through it, while the Austrians, thinking they once more beheld the invincible column so eminently distinguished at the bridge of Lodi, immediately took to slight, leaving the passage of the Mincio free to the whole French Army, which soon after captured Peschiera, drove Beaulieu out of Italy, and invested Mantua.*

Mean-

* While the French were befieging this City, a Convent, which lay exposed to the cannon of the garrison, was evacuated by it's Nuns, and immediately occupied by the Besiegers; who, hearing groans issue from underneath the building, humanely followed the sound, and discovered, in a damp and gloomy dungeon, a Female seated on a crazy chair, and loaded with setters, but whose countenance, though deeply surrowed by misery, looked youthful. On seeing the Soldiers

Meanwhile General Massena entered Verona, the late abode of Lewis Stanis-Las, hereditary King of France, whom the Venetians had not only sheltered in this asylum, but treated with the utmost descrence, till Buonaparte's victories so entirely changed their sentiments, that they suddenly transferred to him all the respect they had before shewn to unfortunate Majesty; nay even ordered Lewis to quit their territories, although they had, but a very short time before, signified to the Directory, "That the royal Fugitive, from being a noble Venetian, was, by the laws of Venice, entitled to her pro-

Soldiers she earnestly petitioned for life and liberty; telling them, she had been four years confined in that cruel manner, for attempting to elope with a young Man who had long been Master of her heart: the Soldiers instantly struck off her fetters; upon which she besought them to lead her into the open air. They represented, that on quitting the shelter of the Convent she would be exposed to a shower of cannon-balls. "Ah!" replied the Nun, "mourir, c'est rester ici!"

Vol. I. G tection."

tection." Lewis, however, previous to his departure for the Condean Army, demanded the golden book in which the name of every noble Venetian is inscribed, that he might erase his own, together with the sword prefented as a token of friendship to Venice by his Ancestor Henry IV. But to these requests Venice answered with unfeeling infolence; "That he need not stay to erase his name, as the Senate would readily do it for him: and that the fword should certainly be returned, provided he would immediately find means to repay a large fum of money which his Ancestor, Henry IV. had borrowed of the Venetian Republic." But, notwithstanding this indecent answer, more worthy of a money-lending Jew than a great and wealthy People, BUONAPARTE, who felt no wish to favour, and no inclination to trust his new Flatterers, the high and mighty Lords of Venice, placed a strong Garrison in Verona, and thus secured posfcffion. session of that City, while he kept the rest of their territories in awe.

His next object was the reduction of Mantua, the only fortress, except the citadel of Milan, which remained in possession of the Austrians, and the only probable obstacle to his meditated conquests in the south of Italy: but the cabinet of Vienna, knowing the great importance of Mantua, strained every nerve to fave it, and was ably feconded by Field-Marshal Wurmser, now appointed to fucceed BEAULIEU in the command of the Auftrian Forces; and, by means of WURM-SER'S exertions, BUONAPARTE was constrained to carry on a formal siege, without the proper engines for fo doing, as he posfessed no artillery but field-pieces won in battle from the Piedmontese and Imperialists; for heavy cannon could not have kept pace with Troops marching rapidly as his did over the Alps. The great heats also, which render the neighbourhood of Mantua particularly unwholesome, were speedily coming on, and feemed more likely to weaken the republican Columns than all the fatigues and perils they had yet encountered. Infurrections too were breaking out in the conquered countries bordering upon the Genoese State, insomuch that BUONAPARTE, finding his convoys attacked, his Couriers affassinated, and his communication with France, by way of the Riva de Genova, menaced, thought it necessary to terminate all differences with Modena, Rome, and Naples, or at least to prevent those Powers from aiding the other Allies, to drive the English from Leghorn, and to adopt such measures as might induce Corsica to place herself once more under Gallic banners.

G 2

Digitized by Google

larly

To stop the insurrection in the conquered countries was the first point; and for this purpose a detachment of the Army marched to Arquata and Tortona, where the Insurgents were most formidable, shot the Leaders, razed

razed their houses to the ground, and thus restored order. Meanwhile another detachment passed the Po at Borgoforte, and on the 19th of June arrived at Bologna, entering that City without refistance, and imprisoning four hundred papal Troops who were stationed there. BUONAPARTE followed in a few hours, and found in Fort Urbino, a place of confiderable strength, whose gates, however, flew open at his command, fifty pieces of heavy ordnance, five hundred muskets, with two months' provifion for fix hundred men. The Garrison, the Cardinal Legate, and all the Roman Etat major were made Prisoners; Ferrara likewise submitted voluntarily, and the Cardinal Legate there, with the Commander of the Citadel were imprisoned, while this fortress furnished the French Army with an hundred and fourteen heavy cannon; in fhort, the ordnance obtained at Modena and in the Episcopal State, enabled BUONAPARTE

G 3

to

to continue the siege of Mantua, which must otherwise have been turned into a blockade.

Fifty pictures, among which was the celebrated St. Cecilia of Raffaelle, were now fent from Bologna to Paris, whither those taken from Parma, Milan, and Modena, had gone before. But, while the republican General was thus robbing Italy of her most. exquisite works of art, he took infinite pains to impress Artists and literary Characters in his favour, treating them with the utmost deference, respecting and even augmenting their property, declaring he confidered Men of Science, whatfoever their country, as Citizens of France, inviting those who were diffatisfied with their present situation to retire to Paris, promifing them all possible encouragement in that city, and affuring them, that the French Nation would derive more pleasure from receiving and cherishing a distinguished Painter, a profound Mathematician.

cian, or any other Man eminent in arts and sciences, than from the most splendid territorial acquisitions: nay, he actually wrote a long letter, expressive of these sentiments, to Oriani, the great Astronomer at Milan, requesting him to circulate it's contents among the Literati; and thus while other Rulers were endeavouring to maintain the empire of force, he sought to establish one by far more powerful, namely, that of opinion.

Faenza and all Romagna now enlifted with alacrity under the republican banners, while a column of French Troops passed the Apennine, and directed its course towards Pistoja, avowedly with an intention of proceeding through Tuscany to Rome.

The Florentines, who had long indulged a confident belief that their alliance with France would secure them from the inroads of French Troops, were now struck with astonishment and apprehension; while the

G 4 Mar.

Marquis Manfredini went in all haste to BUONAPARTE, representing, "That as the Neapolitan Troops had just been refused apasfage through Tuscany, the French could not reasonably demand one: "MANFREDINI's chief dread, however, feemed to be, that the Republicans would march through Florence for the purpose of exciting a revolt; and BUONAPARTE, who read his fentiments. instantly assured him, "That although French Officers might come in small numbers to Florence, the Privates should all go to Pistoja, and from thence to Siena, by which means they would avoid the Capital." MANFREDINI, deeming the great object of his mission accomplished, was tolerably satisfied, while BUONAPARTE, equally judicious, whether acting as a Politician or a General, had no fooner affembled a fufficient number of Troops at Pistoja, than he ordered a detachment to cross the Arno at Fucechio; and then, instead of continuing its route route towards Siena, to march with all posfible rapidity and seize Leghorn: meanwhile he wrote to the Grand Duke, informing him of what was done, and affigning as a reason, "That the republican flag had been infulted in his Royal Highness's Port, and the property of French Merchants violated; and that as he, (through the medium of his Minister at Paris,) had confessed his inability to redress these grievances, France was compelled to redrefs herfelf; though the conduct of her Troops at Leghorn would be conformable to those principles of neutrality which they were fent to maintain:—and on this same day BUONAPARTE announced to the Executive Directory his having granted an armistice to the Pope, on condition, "That an hundred statues, an hundred busts, an hundred vases, an hundred pictures, and five hundred manuscripts, should be felected by French Commissaries, and fent to Paris—that twenty-one millions of French

French livres should be paid to the Republic, independent of contributions to be levied on Bologna, Ferrara, and Faenza—that fifteen millions and a half of the abovenamed fum should be paid in specie or ingots, five millions within fifteen days, five more within the following month; and the remainder within three months; and that the other five millions and a half should be paid in merchandize, horses, &c. whenever demanded by the French Army—that the Pope should immediately fend an Ambassador to Paris, in order to obtain from the Exccutive Directory a definitive peace, by making reparation for the infults received by French subjects in his dominions, and particularly for the murder of BASSEVILLEthat the Individuals detained in his territories for their political opinions should be immediately liberated—that the Roman Ports should be closed against English vessels, and open to those of France—and that the legations

tions of Bologna and Ferrara, with the citadel of Ancona, should be occupied by French Troops." He likewise announced his having granted an armistice to the King of Naples, whose Ambassador, Prince Pignatelli Belmonte, was actually set out for Paris to solicit peace.

On the 27th of June the French entered Leghorn, and a very few hours previous to their arrival, every English ship in the mole, twenty-three in number, sailed for Corsica, conveying away a considerable quantity of merchandize, two hundred and forty oxen, and most of the Families belonging to the British Factory: for our Minister at Florence,* and our Consul at Leghorn,† who had both been indefatigable in procuring good intelligence, knew of this scheme so long before it's execution, that they were able to apprize the Factory of their danger.

Buona-

* The honourable W. F. WYNDHAM.

† John Udney, Efq.

BUONAPARTE followed his Troops on the 20th, and finding that the Tuscan Governor had aided the departure of the English, and was moreover a determined Enemy to France, sent him under an arrest to Florence, requiring that he should not only be dismissed from his office, but imprisoned; a demand with which the Tuscan Cabinet was obliged to comply:—he likewise directed the French Consul at Leghorn to seize all the property left there by British Merchants, and then signified to the Grand Duke his intention of visiting Florence.

It is impossible to describe the alarm produced by this message; a revolution, it was said, would certainly be attempted; and the Grand Duke's Council assuring him, that in such a case his life could not be safe, unanimously and strongly urged his immediately abandoning the Capital. This young Prince, however, with a sirmness he had never shewn before, replied; "No—I was born here, and here here I will remain—I can learn to die in my station, but I cannot learn to desert it: and this gallant and wise resolve had such an effect upon the Tuscans, that all descriptions of People, not absolutely bought by French gold, determined to support their Sovereign; besides which, their eyes were at length opened to the views of France; and now, though too late, did they regret that all the States of Italy had not united to resist by force of arms the invasion of an Enemy, who, in desiance to the common law of Nations, scrupled not to enter the dominions and seize the Ports of her Allies.

In the midst, however, of this universal consternation, the hospitable Florentines did not forget to provide, as far as possible, for the safety of those Foreigners who were living under their protection; insomuch, that we, with other English Families, were defired to retire into the country; while the few French Emigrants, who were really aristocratic, aristocratic, and therefore obnoxious to Rcpublicans, were advised to remove out of the Tuscan territories.

On the 30th BUONAPARTE came to Florence, accompanied by BERTHIER, and part of his état major, but no Privates, except those who commonly attended his person; and these mounted guard at the Palazzo Pitti,* while the Tuscan Troops attended the French General, who was invited to dine with the Grand Duke.

The entrance of the French into Florence was orderly; but the Tuscans received them without one acclamation; and though the Officers paraded every street, hoping, no doubt, to find Partizans who would excite the People to revolt, not one Tuscan Subject welcomed them with "Viva la Republica!" or even seemed to regard them as Friends, The Grand Duke, however, received Buonaparte with affability untinctured by fear,

* The royal Residence.

fear, making him magnificent prefents, and doing the honours of a splendid table with apparent ease and cheerfulness; and though, during dinner, a French Courier arrived to announce that the citadel of Milan had furrendered, the Grand Duke was fo far Master of himself as to betray no concern at this news; but conversed with his Guest respecting the BUONAPARTE Family, (which is of Tuscan origin) and, at the General's instance, conferred upon his Uncle the order of S. Stefano.* In the evening the Duke accompanied EUONAPARTE to the theatre, where the Audience received their Prince with uncommon plaudits.—" You feem to reign in the hearts of your Subjects, Sir, (faid the General); but have you always fuch full houses as this?" "Ufually a great deal fuller," replied the Duke. Buo-NAPARTE looked disappointed, and dropped

the

* An odd favour for a republican Commander to folicit.

the subject: so much, however, was he awed by this Prince's behaviour, that instead of revolutionizing Florence, which seemed his original design, he presented him, if report speak true, with a list of the sew Traitors who disgraced Tuscany, and even promised to evacuate Leghorn whenever the English should quit Corsica.

I cannot in gratitude forbear to mention another instance of his liberality which occurred at this period. The Executive Directory had ordered him not only to seize the property of British Merchants at Leghorn, but that of every British Subject in the Tuscan territories: he answered, however, "That he presumed the latter part of this command originated from some mistake; and, therefore, should sorbear to execute it till he received further instructions:" meanwhile, he took care that British Travellers should be informed of the impending danger, and gave to one English Family, (the

(the only Persons of our Nation who had at that time applied to him) a passport which enabled them to travel through his camp, on their way to England, with persect safety.

He now quitted Florence, whose Inhabitants not finding themselves annoyed by any surther attempts towards a revolution, gradually regained their accustomed tranquillity; by Leghorn, slourishing under the mild and equitable government of it's Duke, was enraged at falling a prey to France; and, notwithstanding the orderly behaviour of the republican Troops, every one of them would have been massacred by that part of the Livorness called Venetians,* had not their Sovereign spoken himself to the Leader of this formidable Band, assuring him, the safety of Tuscany depended on the treatment received by the French at Leghorn:

* Many thousands of these People lived by working for the English Factory, and therefore lost their bread on it's expulsion from Leghorn.

Vol. I.

H

and

and in this point the Grand Duke's conduct was prudent; though he certainly carried policy too far a few days afterwards, by inviting Salicetti, one of the Regicides, to dine with him: for, notwithstanding this Man, by being a principal Commissary of the French Army, was high in power, it ill became the nephew of Louis XVI. to shew him any voluntary mark of favour-Salicetti, however, resused the invitation.

LETTER

LETTER V.

Florence, October 1796.

I WILL now return to the transactions in the north of Italy.

The reduction of the citadel of Milan not only confolidated BUONAPARTE's conquests in that quarter, but likewise furnished him with abundance of useful stores for carrying on the siege of Mantua; nevertheless, as Wurmser had re-assembled in the Tyrol the wrecks of Beaulieu's Army, and also received considerable reinforcements while the French General was engrossed by his expeditions to Bologna and Leghorn, and as the latter had necessarily weakened his Forces by placing Garrisons in conquered Cities, hope once more began to revive the aristocratic Party; insomuch, that a revolt was excited in Romagna, and so obstinately persisted in, that a great deal of blood was spilt on both sides; till, at length, the French army, exasperated by long resistance, sacked the town of Lugo, massacred every Man who was found with arms in his hands, and, by this act of severity, put an end to the insurrection.

H 2 was

Soldiers were now raised in Lombardy and Cispadana, to recruit the republican columns, and the siege of Mantua carried on with such vigour as to promise a speedy reduction of that fortress, which was, indeed, summoned to surrender; but the Commandant answered, "That he resolved to defend himself to the last extremity;" while Wurmser, profiting by continual reinforcements, and determined, if possible, to relieve the City, attacked Massena's division with a superior force, and compelled him to evacuate the important post of Corona; while a column of 15,000 Austrians surprized and drove

General Soret from Salo, forcing General Guieux with 600 men to feek refuge in a large building of that town, from whence, however, they in vain attempted to dislodge him: leaving, therefore, a part of their force to furround his retreat, the rest suddenly descended upon Brescia, where they again surprized the Republicans, taking a considerable number of prisoners, among whom were two Generals, with several sick and wounded Officers, and at the same time advancing upon the rear of their adversaries and compelling them to evacuate Verona and Porta Legnano.

Meanwhile BUONAPARTE, feeing how much the Austrian Army now surpassed his own in point of numbers, and considering that it's present success would naturally inflame it's courage, began to apprehend that his Troops might soon be completely overpowered, and all his splendid conquests wrested from him; in short, he sound (to use his own words) that nothing but the adoption of a bold and vast plan could again turn the tide of victory in his favour.

The Enemy had fo manœuvred as to place his Army between two columns of their's, whose united strength he could not hope to resist; the great object, therefore, was to attack them feparately; and by making a fudden retreat, he thought it possible to furround and discomfit one of these columns at Brescia, and then, returning by the Mincio, to attack the other, led by WURMSER, and compel it to fall back into the Tyrol. But, in order to accomplish this plan, it would be necessary to raise the siege of Mantua, which was on the very point of capitulating, (as it had not the means of refifting fix hours longer) and also to repass the Mincio fo rapidly as to avoid being hommed in by the Austrians. The fiege of Mantua was accordingly raifed, and the French Columns ordered to repass the Mincio, which they

they effected without difficulty. Salo was then attacked and retaken; General Guieux, who had defended himfelf forty-eight hours without tasting food, set at liberty, an obstinate combat fought before Lonado, and the Imperialists defeated, while Brescia was again occupied by French Troops, whose magazines and fick comrades the enemy had not found time to remove. It now remained to attack WURMSER, but that General began the battle by furrounding Massena's advanced guard; and hoping to do the same by the whole French Army, extended his line fo much, that BUONAPARTE cafily threw him into confusion, dispersed his Troops, took twenty field-pieces, killed and wounded between two and three thousand Austrians, made four thousand prisoners. among whom were three Generals, and obtained possession of Castiglione and Lonado for no fooner had the fiege of Mantua been

But the fate of Italy was not yet decided.

H.4 raifed

104 LETTERS FROM ITALY,

raised than it's Garrison destroyed the French works before that City, took possession of an hundred and forty pieces of cannon, which the rapidity of BUONAPARTE's motions had constrained him to abandon, and supplied themselves with a considerable store of provisions: while WURMSER, after affembling his fcattered Troops, and drawing reinforcements from Mantua, still found himself at the head of a powerful Army, infomuch that BUONAPARTE thought it requisite to oppose him with his whole strength; and, after directing all his divisions to collect together for this purpose, went himself to Lonado, in order to fee how many Men might be spared from that fortress: but great was his furprize, on entering the gates, to hear, that a Herald had just summoned the Commandant to furrender to a large column of Auftrians, by whom the place was invested. BUONAPARTE immediately gueffed that this must be a column of WURMSER'S Army, which which had fled during the late battle, and was now returning to join it's Leader; he likewise knew that the garrison of Lonado, (barely twelve hundred ftrong) could not refift this column, but was, together with himself, in imminent danger of being captured. He did not, however, hesitate a moment as to what was proper to be done; but, ordering the Herald into his presence; "Take off the bandage from that Soldier's eyes, (cried he) and let him behold Buona-PARTE and his état-major, encircled by the brave republican Forces. If the Imperialists wish to make us prisoners, they have only to advance; but bid your Officers beware (continued the General, how they offer me a personal insult; they ought to have known the main-body of my army was stationed here, and that I, therefore, could not be abfent; and if within eight minutes they do not ground their arms, no mercy shall be fhewn  fhewn to any of them." This speech was followed by an order for the Grenadiers to prepare for battle: meanwhile, the Herald looked all astonishment at seeing Buona-Parte, and had scarcely delivered his message to the Austrian Commanders before the whole column, consisting of four thousand foot, sifty horse, with two field-pieces, surrendered at discretion.

Thus extricated from his dilemma, Buo-NAPARTE hastened to make another attack upon Wurmser, over whom he gained a second victory, so decisive, that the Imperialists were completely routed; in short, during less than a week, they lost seventy field-pieces, all their baggage, and near twenty thousand men, including killed, wounded and prisoners. But these important, and almost unlooked-for advantages, were purchased by such extreme satigue, both of mind and body, to the French Commander mander in chief, that he never laid down to fleep, and was fearcely off his horse one moment for eight successive days and nights.

The effect of this last victory was the retreat of WURMSER to Roveredo, and the refumption of the fiege of Mantua; but, as the last-named General received continual fuccours from the Tyrol, and was, befides, in a country more eafily defended than most others of Europe, he flattered himself with hopes of revenging his late defeats, and still preferving Mantua: he had, however, but little time to recruit; for BUONAPARTE, after re-possessing himself of all his former posts, making an exchange of prisoners, and thereby recovering the Troops who were taken by his Opponents during their tranfient fuccesses, delayed not a moment to pass the Adige and sollow the Austrian Army, which (after gaining flight advantages) he refolved to attack in the almost impregnable defiles of Marco, and the intrenched camp camp of Mori. This resolution was executed. at day-break, and, after a long and obstinate resistance, both posts were carried, and the Enemy put to slight, chiefly owing to the determined bravery of General Dubois, who received three mortal wounds in this hard-sought combat, and, while dying, exclaimed: "I fall for the Republic—may I only live to hear her victory is complete!" But such, indeed, was the enthusiastic patriotism with which Buonaparte had inspired his Followers, that instances like this were by no means uncommon.

The flying Austrians were now pursued to Roveredo, and, being speedily constrained to abandon that town, retreated towards Trent, preparing to defend themselves in a position which must have proved impregnable (and covered the last named City), had they been allowed a few hours to fortify it: but BUONAPARTE, aware that the fruits of his victory would be lost, if the enemy were not instantly re-attacked, pointed this out to his

his Troops, who, in spite of excessive fatigue, cheerfully renewed the action; and after another fevere contest, which continucd till the close of day, WURMSER was a fecond time defeated; while this battle, one of the most important ever fought by BUONAPARTE, made him Mafter of Trent, and the passes leading to Vienna. After settling the new government of Trent, he immediately purfued WURMSER, who had retreated towards Bolzano, and who, notwithstanding perpetual defeats, and the loss of four thousand Men in killed, wounded, Prifoners, and Deferters, besides thirty pieces of cannon, a confiderable number of baggagewaggons, and four hundred horses, fince he took refuge in the Tyrol, still defended himfelf with fuch judgment and bravery as commanded the respect of his Opponents, and merited the praise of all Europe. Nevertheless, in the battle of Bassano, he only just escaped escaped being taken; and finding that Army which, but a month before, threatened to drive the French out of Italy, now reduced to less than ten thousand Men, he had nothing left but to throw himself into Mantua. BUONAPARTE, however, took measures to prevent the accomplishment of this plan: but, owing to want of skill, or want of integrity in his Officers, it was nevertheless effeeted, though the four days which fucceeded the battle of Bassano were only continued feries of combats; and if a fleet and well disciplined pack of hounds pursuing an old, fagacious, and fierce wild-boar, may ever be compared with propriety to the operations of war, it is in this instance indeed, had BUONAPARTE's orders been properly executed, Wurmser would have been made a prifoner and Mantua taken; whereas now, the Garrison of that City, animated by the presence of it's General, and reinforced by the remnant remnant of his Troops, was likely to hold out till another Army could be collected for it's refcue.

At this period, however (September 1796), the affairs of France were in a very flourishing fituation; Spain having concluded an offensive and defensive treaty of alliance with her; Naples* and Parma a peace; and the Pope an armiffice, which threw him entirely into her power; while Tuscany submitted to her requisitions, and all the north of Italy (Mantua excepted) was absolutely fubdued. Corfica alone remained faithful to the Allies; and BUONAPARTE, by establishing a correspondence between his Emisfaries there, and at Leghorn, put affairs into fuch a posture, that England judged it prudent to relinquish her newly acquired kingdom, of which the French Commissary, SA-LICETTI, took possession during the present month

* The King of Naples bound himself by the secret articles of this peace to pay France a large sum of money.

month of October—and as Genoa had been compelled to shut her ports against the English; as Leghorn and Civita-Vecchia no longer dared to admit their veffels; and Naples, according to treaty, could only receive four at once, Buonaparte now flattered himself the Mediterranean trade would be totally lost to Great Britain, and henceforth prove a constant source of riches to the town of Marscilles. Italy, too, was a mine replete with wealth; and while the major part of her Citizens, dazzled by specious promises, and fascinated by a phantom falsely called Liberty, were blind to the real intentions of their Conqueror, he, though naturally envelloped with referve, was led by a pretty Woman to betray those intentions very plainly; for as Le was dining at Milan with a large company of Italian Ladies, one of them ventured to ask, "What he designed doing with Italy?" He made no reply-again she asked the same question—he still was filent -but—but, on it's being repeated a third time, called for a lemon, cut it in two, squeezed all the juice out of one-half, threw it away; then squeezed the juice out of the other half, and threw that away likewise. Thus was the Lady answered; but this expressive hint did not open the eyes of the Cisalpini, though Milan had already been compelled to furnish the French Republic with twelve hundred thousand gold sequins, besides immense quantities of military stores.

Vol. I.

T

LETTER

LETTER VI.

Naples, March 1797.

OWARDS the end of October 1796, we quitted Florence, and went to pass our winter at Rome: where the transactions were fo interesting, that I shall venture to detail them at length; first mentioning, however, that while France experienced a reverse of fortune in the north of Italy, the People of Milan, Bologna, and Ferrara, remained faithful to her cause, though urged by her Priests to revolt; but the Pope no fooner heard that the fiege of Mantua had been raised, and the French Garrison at Ferrara withdrawn to aid BUONAPARTE. than he dispatched a Vice-Legate to take possesfion of that City, though this proceeding openly violated the Armiftice; the Legate, however. however, was suffered to enter without opposition; but, upon his replacing the epifcopal arms over the Palazzo publico, a riot enfued, and the arms of the French Republic were substituted for those of his Holiness: while the news of BUONAPARTE's fresh successes from induced the ecclesiastical Deputy to terminate his mission, and go back to Rome. Meanwhile the Roman Populace, decidedly inimical to France, and indignant at their Sovereign's dear-bought armistice, no sooner heard the siege of Mantua had been raised, than styling themselves Sangue di Troja, and swearing by all their Saints that not a fingle statue or picture should be fent to Paris, they insulted, and nearly murdered the French Commissaries employed in felecting the above-named works of art. This outrage was, of course, complained of; and the Pope declared himself ready to punish the Offenders; but, as

I 2

Madonnas

Madonnas were feen to move their eyes,* and miracles on miracles fucceeded each other, he was, according to some authorities, constrained, as a proof of his fincerity, to dismiss his Secretary of State, Cardinal ZELADA, faid to be an Enemy to France, and appoint, in his stead, Cardinal Busca, the tool of the Spanish Minister, AZZARA, and therefore a Friend to democracy. Other authorities, however, stated, that ZELADA (alike disapproving the conclusion of the armistice and it's violation afterwards) had voluntarily refigned; but, be this as it may, the Pope feemed to lose much by the change; as, from the moment when ZELADA retired. every act of the Papacy tended to accelerate it's downfall.

Shortly after these events had taken place, GARRAU and SALICETTI presented to his

Holines

* This is supposed to be a manifestation of the blessed Virgin's grace and favour to the Romans.

Holiness sixty-four conditions of peace, many of which were fo humiliating, and at the same time so destructive to the Roman Catholic religion, that he declared himself bound in conscience to reject them. The French Commissaries replied, "That they must all be accepted to their full extent, or 'all refused:" in consequence of which the Pontiff not only suspended the treaty, and endeavoured to procure better terms through the mediation of Spain, but held back the contributions, statues, &c. still due to France by virtue of the armistice, at the same time calling upon Naples for protection, (which his Sicilian Majesty promised to grant),* imposing heavy taxes for the purpose of levying and maintaining Troops, and accepting the offers made by Princes Colonna and

I 3

Giusti-

*The King of Naples, however, behaved most dishonourably, by pretending to have made verbal terms with the French Directory in favour of Rome, when he had entirely neglected her interest.

118 LETTERS FROM ITALY,

though France had proposed terms which the Court of Rome was certainly justified in rejecting, recent occurrences did not encourage a violation of the armistice, as the Duke of Modena, from a similar conduct, had been condemned to lose his dominions and see them united to the Legations of Bologna and Ferrara: but his Holiness slattered himself another Austrian Army would try to relieve Mantua; and, while that fortress held out, conceived it impossible for the French to seize Rome.* Great preparations however, were apparently made for desence;

* At this period we visited the public Museums, and had the mortification to find many of the most celebrated statues packed up; while the poor Custodi who attended us shed tears on our enquiring for the dying Gladiator. "Alas!" cried he, pointing to a large packing-case, "it is there, prepared for it's journey. His Holiness, however, tells the Workmen to be as long in making one of these cases now, as they used to be in making a thousand; but the times are awful, and what may prove the sate of Rome we know not."

Soldiers

Soldiers being raised in every province, and Recruits daily marched into the capital; while every Roman Nobleman paraded up and down the Corso, decked with warlike accourrements, and every Peasant fancied himself, in point of courage, a second Camillus.

Had the Church seized this moment to fan the slame of patriotism which glowed in the breasts of her Subjects; had she once more published a general crusade, terming the desence of Italy a holy war against Insidels, who not only threatened to destroy the chair of St. Peter, but trample under soot the Christian cross, not BUONAPARTE himself, Hero as he is, could have combated the united force of all the Roman Catholic Princes: but Pius VI. timid from age, and impolitic from sollowing the advice of his weak and avaricious Nephew, Duke BRASCHI, soon betrayed a want of proper steadiness; and when the Colonna regiment, actually three thousand strong, and the Civic Guard, reputed to confift of fourteen thoufand Roman Citizens, went to have their fwords and banners bleffed by their Sovereign in the Piaszo di S. Pietro, where all Rome affembled to view the ceremony, his Holiness, as if apprehensive that his bleffing would be of no avail, fent Deputies to confer it: thus disappointing every Spectator, and damping the ardour of his fuperstitious Soldiers, by leading them to suppose their weapons, destitute of his personal apostolic benediction, might not prove invincible: nay more, though the Emperor was fecretly folicited to protect the Papal Chair with his Armies, and fend his Officers to discipline and command the newly raifed ecclefiaftical Troops, thousands of Recruits, who had recently marched into Rome, were now ordered back to their respective provinces and di binded: but, notwithstanding this, the principal conditions of the armiftice were Hiff still unfulfilled, and no measures taken to procure a permanent peace; though when British ships attempted coming into Roman Ports, they were fired upon in compliance with the armistice; and yet his Holiness scrupled not to profess himself the Ally of England.

But while the conduct of the Papal Government was thus weak and contradictory, that of the Austrian Cabinet was wife and energetic; for, no fooner had WURMSER been compelled to feek refuge in Mantua, than a grand effort was made to relieve him, and fo many Troops rapidly collected, and even fent in post-carriages, from every quarter of the Imperial dominions, that an Army of above forty thousand men, commanded by General D'ALVINZI, and raised as it were by magic, once more gave Buona-PARTE cause to tremble lest Victory should at length defert his standard. These Forces, far more numerous than his own, arrived about about the middle of November in the neighbourhood of Verona, whither he immediately marched; and having thrown a bridge of boats over the Adige, under cover of night, he passed that river at day-break next morning, with two columns of his Army, (the one commanded by Massena, the other by AUGEREAU), hoping to fall unexpectedly on the flank and rear of his Opponents, and thereby possess himself of their magazines and artillery-park. D'ALVINZI, however, procured intelligence of this plan time enough to post a strong body of Troops in the Village of Arcola, which commanded the only bridge over a Canal it was necessary for the French to cross before they could accomplish their purpose. This Village, remarkably strong in point of situation, from being furrounded with bogs and dikes, was vigorously attacked by the republican Advanced Guard under Augereau; but it's Defenders kept up so terrible and incessant a fire that the Assailants gave way, although Generals VERDIER, BON, VERNE, and LASNES, repeatedly led them back to the affault, till all these officers were compelled by dangerous wounds to quit the field of action. In vain did Augereau (knowing the hazard of delay), grasp a standard, carry it to the bridge, and wait there feveral minutes amidst a shower of bullets and cannonballs, exhorting his Soldiers to follow him: in vain, too, did BUONAPARTE, with the whole état major, rush forward, call upon his Grenadiers to remember the battle of Lodi, difmount from his horse, grasp another standard, and advance to the bridge, crying, "Follow your General;" for although his example produced a momentary effect; he was quickly thrown down, one of his aides-de-camp killed, and most of the état major wounded. This obstinate combat lasted an entire day; but, at night, General Guieux, who had been ordered to cross the Adige Adige by means of a distant ferry, and then march to ftorm the Village in rear, fucceeded, taking four pieces of cannon, and feveral Prisoners; though, before morning, the approach of D'ALVINZI's whole Army compelled Guieux to abandon his conquest. With the dawn D'ALVINZI (who, during the brave refistance made on the preceding day by his Troops at Arcola, had found time to prepare for a general engagement), attacked BUONAPARTE at all points. Mas-SENA's division, however, which was stationed on the left, repelled the Austrians with advantage, as did a column under Ro-BERT; but AUGEREAU, who was stationed on the right, and once more assailed Arcola, proved again unfuccessful. On the following night BUONAPARTE threw a bridge over the Canal which had fo long impeded his progress; but, next morning, D'ALVINZI attacked the centre of the republican Army with fuch impetuofity, that it must have been defeated defeated had not General GARDANNE, who was placed in ambuscade, fallen upon the flank of the Austrians, and made a dreadful carnage: meanwhile Buonaparte, feeing AUGEREAU a third time repulsed at Arcola, ordered the Captain of his Guides, with twenty-five chosen Men, to make a large circuit, and then fuddenly advance full gallop on the Enemy's rear, founding feveral trumpets. This manœuvre fucceeded; for the Austrians, being intimidated, gave way; AUGEREAU took advantage of their confufion; and a column of eight or nine hundred Men, who had likewise been dispatched to fall upon their rear, routed them completely, while Massena marched into Arcola, of which he easily took possession, and then joined in pursuing his discomfited Adversaries till night compelled him to desist.

fire

The Austrians lost, in these three successive actions, from eight to ten thousand Men, in killed, wounded, and prisoners, with near twenty twenty pieces of cannon: but the victory cost Buonapare dear, two of his Aidesde-camp (to both of whom he was much attached) being killed, three Generals killed likewise, and five wounded, while his left wing was put to flight at Rivoli. This difgrace, however, he quickly wiped away by another victory; at the same time shutting out d'Alvinzi from all the approaches to Mantua, though his Forces still remained formidable; and the Venetians, notwithstanding their professed neutrality, did every thing in their power to assist him.*

About

* Immediately after this bloody battle of Arcola, BUONAPARTE wrote a letter to his Friend General CLARKE, from the contents of which it feems that Envy had already pointed against the honour of the Corsican Hero those attacks which, judging from appearances, at length drove him to take refuge in Egypt, and deprived France of her strongest support. The substance of the letter was as follows:

&quot;Your Nephew, ELLIOT, has fallen in the field. This Youth was familiar with war, often led Columns to the affault, and promifed to become a diffinguished.

Officer:

About this period BUONAPARTE intercepted a letter from the Emperor to WURM-SER, by which it appeared, that Mantua was reduced to the last extremity, the Garrison being compelled to live upon horse-slesh; in consequence of which new exertions were making at Vienna, and all the Imperial frontiers disarmed, that large reinforcements might once more be sent in post-carriages to D'ALVINZI. The French Commander, therefore, deeming it prudent, before these

Officer: he died gloriously, in face of his Enemies, without suffering one moment's pain—and where is the thinking man who, (vexed by the vicistitudes of human life,) would not gladly escape, by such a death, from a world frequently despicable?—Where, indeed, is the Soldier in my Army who has not repeatedly wished to be thus sheltered from the stings of Envy, Calumny, and other odious passions, which too often feem to influence the conduct of Mankind?"

After this buttle, likewife, the General wrote to the Wife of his other Aide-de-Camp, MUIRON, enumerating the virtues of the Deccased, lamenting his own private loss and that of the Public, and offering to the young Widow (who was pregnant) every consolation which his purse and interest could procure.

fuccours

fuccours should arrive, to awe the Court of Rome into an acceptance of whatever terms of peace he might choose to impose, and having, moreover, a negociation to carry on with Florence, which his near approach to that City was likely to help forward,* marched to Bologna with a moveable column of two thousand men, which, owing to his judicious management, was quickly magnified by fame into five times that number: and letters were actually written from Bologna to Rome, stating, "That ten thoufand French Troops had entered the former City, and that ten thousand more were following, with an intention to destroy the Papacy." Such, however, was the infatuation of the Romans, that these letters were difregarded,

* This negociation terminated in the Grand Duke's paying eight hundred thousand French livres as an indemnification for the expenses of the French Garrison at Leghorn; and in a promise from BUONAPARTE to withdraw that Garrison on condition that twelve hundred thousand livres more should be paid by Tuscany to the French Republic.

difregarded, while the public mind feemed totally engrossed by the proceedings of D'ALVINZI'S Army, and the arrival of the Austrian General Colli, who was sent for by the Pope, under a promise of being placed at the head of eighteen thousand effective Troops, though he did not find one-third of that number in all the ecclesiastical dominions.

No fooner had BUONAPARTE reached Bologna than D'ALVINZI, whose Forces once more amounted to forty thousand Men, profiting by the absence of his invincible Opponent, prepared to make a general attack upon the republican Troops near Verona, while, by fuperiority of numbers, he actually routed Augereau's division at Bevilaqua. BUONAPARTE, therefore, found it requisite to hasten back with his moveable column. which he fent, by forced marches, to aid AUGEREAU, going himself to Verona, where he arrived at the moment when the Enemy Vol. I. K was was making a formidable attack upon the division commanded by Massena, which at first gave way, though afterwards the Auftrians were repulfed with lofs. Next morning it appeared, from D'ALVINZI's manœuvres, that he purposed opening himself a passage to Mantua by Rivoli, where the French lines were weak: BUONAPARTE. therefore, fet out post for the last-named place, ordering all the Troops he could fpare from other quarters to follow him: but, on arriving at Rivoli, he had the mortification to find his force, when united, would not be equal in numbers to that of the Imperialists, who occupied, moreover, a very advantageous position. At this critical moment, (as I heard from what feemed good authority) while he was fitting in his tent, reckoning a large fum of money, and waiting for day-break, when his Troops expected to be attacked, an Austrian Officer entered, staid a short time, and then disappeared; the money disappeared likewise; while Buo-NAPARTE told his Comrades, "That Italy was vanquished, and Mantua theirs." But, be this story true or false, an obstinate battle. which lasted two days, immediately ensued, though France at length proved completely victorious: while the fruits of this contest were thirteen thousand prisoners, and D'AL-VINZI himself narrowly escaped being taken. Another division of Austrians however, commanded by General PROVERA, croffed the Adige at Anguiari, and, after two sharp actions with the Republicans who guarded that passage, proceeded, under the veil of night, towards Mantua, and had just reached it's Fauxbourgs, when BUONAPARTE came up with them at La Favorita, and a fresh combat enfued, in which PROVERA and all his Troops, amounting to fix thousand Men, were taken, while a convoy of corn and cattle, with which he designed to supply Mantua, fell into the hands of the Victors, and K 2 WurmWURMSER, who made a fally during the engagement, was forced to return precipitately, leaving four hundred Men behind him.

Thus was D'ALVINZI'S fecond Army deftroyed, and the fate of Mantua at length decided, while BUONAPARTE, from the 8th to the 16th of January, took twenty thoufand prisoners, forty-four field-pieces, an immense quantity of baggage, and all the battalions of Vienna-Volunteers, with their colours, embroidered by the Empress.

These events produced at Rome some degree of consternation, which was augmented by fresh accounts from Bologna, stating, "That a formidable French Army, with a large number of cannon, had actually passed that City on it's route to Ancona:" and scarcely was this news circulated, before a letter arrived by way of Florence, (being sent by Buonaparte to the French Minister there) containing an account of the surrender render of Mantua. The Aristocrats flattered themselves the letter was a forgery, while the Conclave issued a paper denying that Mantua had fallen; but, notwithstanding this, Duke Braschi seemed alarmed, and his Lady unceasingly teized the Pope with "Salvateci, Padre! salvateci santo Padre!" Still, however, the generality of People remained tranquil, endeavouring to find comfort in a report which was industriously spread, of some Roman Troops near Imola having repulsed the French.

Meantime BUONAPARTE, to whom Mantua had really submitted on the 2d of February, issued, on the 3d, a proclamation signifying, "That as the armistice with Rome had been repeatedly violated by the Pope, the French were about to enter his territories; though, faithful to the principles they professed, they would respect the religion and the People of the country; and, carrying a sword in one hand, and an K 3 olive-olive-branch in the other, give peace and protection to the towns and villages which received them as Friends; while those who madly opposed Soldiers whose prowess had, in six months, destroyed sive Austrian Armies, would draw upon themselves all the horrors incident to war—That the Romish Clergy should continue to enjoy their present rank and emoluments, provided they acted in conformity with the precepts of the Gospel; but, if they transgressed those precepts, that they should become amenable to military law, and even receive more rigorous chastisement than Seculars."

His Holiness's Forces were now hastily asfembled, and sent, under General Colli's command, to protect the Campania of Rome; but these Forces did not amount to six thousand Men, though above thirty thousand had been enlisted, and a large sum of money levied for their support: in vain, therefore, did this handful of raw Troops endeavour endeavour to oppose a strong Army of Veterans. Fourteen sield-pieces (being all his Holiness possessed) were taken on the banks of the Senio; after which, the French attacked Faenza: this place made a show of resistance, but, being deserted by all it's military and ecclesiastical Officers, was speedily subdued; while BUONAPARTE, instead of pillaging the town, sent sifty Romans, whom he had made prisoners, to represent to it's Inhabitants the danger of opposing superior power: he likewise assembled the Priests, giving them the same lesson, and sending them to advise the People of other towns to open their gates.

By methods fuch as these he quickly became Master of all Romagna, the Duchy of Urbino, and the whole district of Ancona; though the celebrated treasures of Loretto were in part saved by General Colli; but, as he did not think it worth while to carry off the samous Madonna, she, with several K4 relicks, relicks, was fent to Paris.* Perugia and all Umbria likewise submitted to France: whose Troops, meeting with no further opposition, advanced rapidly towards Rome. This hitherto deluded City was now feized with an universal panic, to calm which, however, we were told, on the morning of the 10th of February, "That the Romans had gained a fecond victory near Ancona;" but, ere. night, it was too clear that the Officers had fled to a Man, and the Privates thrown down their arms; that the French Forces were not above forty leagues distant, that the Pope and Cardinals had refolved to abfcond during the dead of night; and that, on their departure, a general pillage would be attempted by the Inhabitants of Traftevere, whose ferocity was too well known not to be greatly feared: and, to encrease

the

* BUONAPARTE informed the Directory that he found at Loretto the value of three millions of livrestournois, in plate, &c.

the alarm which this intelligence naturally produced, orders were iffued by Government, that no beaft of burden should be suffered to quit the City without permission from the Post-Master.

Mr. Graves (a Gentleman who acted as English Minister) now hastened to the Secretary of State, requesting horses and passiports for his Countrymen, but had the mortification to receive for answer, "That, during the next twenty-sour hours, no beast of burden would be suffered to quit Rome."

Thus compelled to abide the threatening tempest, I directed my steps towards St. Peter's, wishing to see, perhaps for the last time, that beautiful and majestic edifice. On my way I overtook droves of mules and horses proceeding towards the Castle of St. Angelo, at the gates of which fortress stood carriages guarded by cannon, and laden, as the Soldiers said, with the treasures of Loretto, which his Holiness was going to send to Terracina.

Terracina. Crowds of Romans stood gazing at this fight, though not a fyllable was fpoken, suspense and fear having tied every tongue; while St. Peter's exhibited altars wholly deferted, except by a dozen terrified Pricsts whispering in couples to each other, and as many Females praying with looks of fear and despondency. In this tremendous posture of affairs it was impossible to think of fleep; I, therefore, entreated the favour of Mr. Graves to inform me, hour by hour, of the events of the approaching night; and at two in the morning he kindly fent me word, "That upwards of twelve thousand People had assembled round the Vatican, declaring, they would murder all the Sacred College, not sparing even the Pope himself, if any one of it's Members attempted to defert Rome; consequently, they had relinquished every idea of flight, and refolved that Duke BRASCHI, with other Deputies, should immediately go to Buona-PARTE and implore peace." The threats of the People, however, though feconded by the Civic-Guard, would not have prevented his Holiness from absconding privately, had not two English Gentlemen arrived with letters from General Colli, and infifted upon delivering them into the Pope's own hands, which, with great difficulty, they accomplished. These letters were to say, "That his Holiness might remain with safety in his Capital, and should certainly have some days notice in case his removal were to become necessary." The Pope, on reading these letters, absolutely danced with joy, and fent orders to difmiss his travelling-carriage, which had been in waiting five hours.

PARTE

But to return to Mr. GRAVES; this Gentleman, whose conduct was exemplary, as he neglected his own private interest to preserve the property and ensure the safety of his Fellow-Subjects, now obtained horses and passports for all the English who chose to Icave Rome; my Family was among this number; and we had not travelled many miles on the Naples road, before we overtook above fifty carriages laden with bars of gold and filver, Spanish dollars, and precious stones, to the amount, it was said, of two millions sterling, and not the treasures of Loretto, as had been given out, but those of his Holiness and Duke Braschi; if money levied, in the first instance, to stop France from annihilating the Papacy, and, in the next, to raise Troops for the desence of Rome, could be fo denominated. This treafure accompanied us to Terracina, from " whence it would have been embarked for Malta, had not BUONAPARTE's mandate arrested it's progress. The Pope now wrote to that General as follows:

" Dear Son, health and apostolic benediction!

" DESIRING to terminate amicably our differences with the French Republic by the retreat retreat of the Troops which you command, we fend and depute to you, as our Plenipotentiaries, two Ecclefiastics, namely, Cardinal MATTEI, who is perfectly known to you,* and Monfignor GALEPPI; and two Seculars, namely, Duke Braschi, our Nephew, and the Marquis Camillo Massi-Mo; who are invested with our full powers to concert with you, promife, and fubfcribe, fuch conditions as we hope will be just and reasonable; obliging ourselves, under our faith and word, to approve and ratify them in special form, in order that they may be valid and inviolable in all future time. Affured of the fentiments of good will which you have manifested, we have abstained from removing any thing out of Rome; † by which you

* This Ecclefiastic had previously corresponded with BUONAPARTE, who assured him, he wished to give a proof of his consideration for the Holy See by granting peace to Rome.

† The Reader will recollect that all the papal treafures had, previous to this period, been fent to Terracina, you will be persuaded of the entire considence we repose in you. We conclude by assuring you of our most persect esteem, and by bestowing upon you the paternal apostolic benediction.

"Given at St. Peter's, on the 12th February, 1797, in the 22d year of our Pontificate.

"Pius, P. P. VI."

During ten days after the departure of this letter, the Pontiff remained in awful uncertainty respecting his sate; at length, however, Duke Braschi returned from the Republican camp with the following reply:*

- "Head quarters at Tolentino, 1st Ventose. "Most holy Father,
- "My thanks are due to your Holiness for the obliging expressions contained in the
- * It is afferted, that when Braschi arrived at Tolentino to implore peace, he was introduced by Buo-NAPARTU to his état major, as CITIZEN BRASCHI, to whom France had so many obligations in Piedmont.

letter

letter you have taken the trouble to fend me.

- "The peace between the French Republic and your Holiness is just signed; and I felicitate myself in having been able to contribute to your personal safety.
- "I entreat your Holiness to guard against the Persons now at Rome, who are bought by those Courts which do not desire peace, or who suffer themselves to be guided exclusively by those emotions of hatred which the loss of territory naturally engenders. Europe knows your Holiness's pacific inclinations and conciliatory virtues; and the French Republic will, I trust, prove herself one of Rome's sincerest Friends.
  - "I fend my Aide-de-camp, chief of brigade, to express to your Holiness the perfect esteem and veneration which I feel for your person, and to entreat you to confide in my desire to give, on every occasion, proofs of the

144 LETTERS FROM ITALY,

the respect with which I have the honour to be, &c.

"BUONAPARTE."

Confidering the defenceless state of Rome, the terms imposed by her Conqueror were not deemed rigorous, as he allowed the Ecclefiaftical Government to continue for the life of Pius VI. contenting himself with demanding; "That she should abandon the coalition against France, and furnish no supplies to the Enemies of the Republic, either during the prefent or any future war-that she should disband her newly-raised Troops, renounce for ever all right over the town and territory of Avignon, the Comtat Venaissin, and it's dependencies, and the Legations of Bologna, Ferrara, and Romagnathat she should yield the district of Ancona to France, till there was a general peace in Europe—that she should pay, before the middle of March, 1797, to the French Army, my, fifteen millions of livres-tournois, befides horses, oxen, &c. being the remaining part of contributions imposed by the armistice that she should likewise pay to the French Republic fifteen millions more, in money diamonds, or other valuables, during the month of April; and that all the manufcripts, pictures, and statues, selected by French Artists, in consequence of the armistice, should be fent without further delay to Paris—while, on the other hand, he bound himself to withdraw his Troops from Umbria, Perugia, and Camerino, fo foon as the first-named fifteen millions were paid, and from the other newly-conquered countries not mentioned above, upon every condition both of the peace and armiftice being punctually fulfilled." And when French Commissaries entered Rome, in order to execute these conditions, all was perfectly quiet, owing chiefly, however, to the vigilance of the Civic-Guard, though, very foon afterward; Vol. I. th:  ${

m L}$

the City was fet on fire in four places by ncedy Jacobins, who hoped, during a general conflagration, to plunder the palaces of what little wealth their Owners were still fuffered to retain; and who scrupled not to accuse Buonaparte of being an Aristocrat and a Traitor to France, because he forbore to overthrow the episcopal government, and authorize an univerfal pillage. Happily, however, the flames were extinguished, and the Perpetrators of this infernal deed discovered and imprifoned; while the Civic-Guard, by patroling the streets night and day, restored to Rome her wonted tranquillity.*

* So excellent was the police maintained by these armed Citizens, that affassinations, formerly so common at Rome, now ceased to be heard of, even in the Piazza di Spagna, and other privileged places.

It must, I presume, be known to my Readers, that every foreign Minister at the Court of Rome had a right to protect the Perpetrators of murders committed in the vicinity of their palaces.

LETTER

LETTER VII.

Florence, March 1798.

SCARCELY had we taken up our abode at Naples, before strong apprehensions were entertained by that Court respecting the fafety of Vienna; for, when BUONA-PARTE had concluded a peace with the Pope, presented the little Republic of S. Marino with marks of his favour, and indemnified the patrimony of Virgil, (now called Pietolo) for the injuries it sustained during the fiege of Mantua, he refolved to avail himself still further of his late brilliant fuccesses, by putting a period to the war between France and the Emperor: preparing, therefore, to pass the Tagliamento, a terrific barrier, which feems formed by nature to prevent the Germans and Italians from invading  $L_2$

vading each other, the Hero of Italy thus addreffed his victorious Comrades. capture of Mantua has nearly given the finishing stroke to a campaign which entitles you to the cternal gratitude of your country. You have gained fourteen pitched-battles, and feventy of less magnitude; you have taken an hundred thousand prisoners, five hundred field-pieces, two thousand heavy cannon, and above an hundred standards: the contributions levied on conquered countries have supported and paid the Army during this whole campaign. You have, moreover, fent thirty millions of livres to Paris, and enriched her museum with above three hundred master-pieces of ancient and modern art, the work of thirty ages! You have conquered the garden of Europe; Lombardy and Cifpadana are indebted to you for their freedom. The colours of France wave on the shores of the Adriatic: the Kings of Sardinia and Naples, the Pope, and the Duke of Parma, are detached from the coalition of our Enemies, and leagued in friendship with us. You have chased the English from Leghorn, Genoa, and Corsica; but your work is not yet complete: a more fplendid achievement is in referve for you. Austria, who will not listen to the Executive Directory, which has spared no pains to give peace to Europe, and restore you to the arms of your Families-Austria, who, for three fuccessive centuries, has been diminishing her power by war, and exciting discontents among her Subjects, by depriving them of their privileges, must now be attacked in the very heart of her dominions, and forced to accept of fuch terms as we shall think proper to grant; thus descending in reality to that rank of a fecondary Power, in which she has already placed herfelf by fubmitting to receive the pay, and comply with the requisitions of England."

The republican Columns, ever ready to L 3 obey obey their Leader, croffed the Tagliamento in face of an Imperial Army, commanded by the Arch-Duke CHARLES, and then purfued their march, through the defiles of the Alps parallel with this torrent, to Ponteba, croffing Carinthia to Bruck, which is within a few posts of Vienna, and where a suspenfion of arms was folicited by the Emperor, and immediately granted by BUONAPARTE, who wrote, indeed, from Clagenfurt, the capital of Carinthia, to the Arch-Duke CHARLES, advising him to think of a ceffation of hostilities; and as the Imperial Army had not made one important stand from the time when the republican Columns passed the Tagliamento till their arrival at Bruck, and another division of French Troops had completely fubdued the Tyrol, and then united themselves to BUONAPARTE, there seemed no probable means of preferving Vienna but by an immediate peace, the preliminaries of which were, therefore, figned at Leoben, on the

the 18th of April 1797, upon the following basis: "His Imperial Majesty renounced Belgium, recognized the new limits of the French dominions, and acknowledged the independence of the Cisalpine Republic."

These terms, considering the ostensible fituation of the Emperor, were as generous on the fide of France as BUONAPARTE'S fuccess in penetrating to the heart of the Austrian territories was extraordinary. followed the track of his forces from Bologna through the Venetian State to Ponteba and Bruck; and how they found means to enter Germany by fuch a road feems inexplicable, as one thousand men might apparently have prevented fifty times that number, either from croffing the Tagliamento or paffing Ponteba, where, had the Inhabitants merely afcended the Alps with which their town is furrounded, and rolled down stones upon the Invaders, they would undoubtedly have stopped, and probably vanquished, the Conqueror of Italy. The Germans, however, scruple not to infinuate that their Sovereign favoured BUONA-PARTE's approach, in order to furnish himfelf with a pretence for making peace without the concurrence of England; and what feems to justify this opinion is, the very liberal terms obtained by Austria, and the certainty that the French, in their progress from Ponteba to Bruck, acted more like Friends than Conquerors, no injury whatfoever being complained of, even by the Publicans whose houses they occupied, except the loss of a few filver spoons in the frontier towns, and an extraordinary confumption of poultry, bread, and wine, in those places where the Army halted.

A few weeks after the above-named preliminaries of peace were fettled, Buona-PARTE closed his campaign, by possessing himself himself of Venice, destroying that ancient aristocracy, and at the same time revolutionizing Genoa.*

I cannot finish this sketch of the most rapid and brilliant conquests ever gained in so short a period, either by ancient or modern Warriors, without lamenting, that a Man whose great and amiable qualities at once excite our wonder and our praise, a Man whose persuasive eloquence and consummate policy taught Italy to call her rapacious and despotic Conqueror the Parent of her happiness and freedom, should have been betrayed, by the salse principles of a French education, to establish the dominion of Blasphemers, Regicides, and Robbers, dimming the lustre of his courage, by deriving it from ideas of predestination, and

cclipfing

* The behaviour of the French Army in the environs of Venice reflected great discredit on it's Leader. Every Nobleman's, and almost every Peasant's house being gutted and defaced, while even the statues without doors were all broken.

154 LETTERS FROM ITALY,

eclipfing the splendour of his victories by the wickedness of the cause they were gained to support. To that branch of French philosophy, however, termed Free-thinking, may we attribute the errors of Buonaparte, and the growth of those licentious maxims and manners, which have brought an unoffending Monarch to the guillotine, destroyed the peace of Society, and deluged Europe with blood,

But to have done with this long digreffion, and continue my narrative respecting Rome. As that City remained perfectly tranquil, and the French Minister at Naples (an Ex-noble, and a very respectable Man) affured us "The Executive Directory wished to protect and continue the ecclesiastical Government during the life of the present Pope;" nay, as self-interest impelled them to pursue this mode of conduct, because (to adopt Buonaparte's manner of expression) they obtained more juice from the lemon while

while it was fqueezed by his Holiness, than they could possibly get by fqueezing it themfelves, we, with many of our Countrymen, returned to Rome in October 1797, and discovered not, for several weeks, any cause to repent our determination; all ranks of People being consident, that no change of government would take place till after the Pope's death, while many Individuals afferted, "That, even were he to die, there would be no cause for dread, such steps having already been taken as would disarm the Sacred College, and enable France to effect a revolution without interrupting the public peace.

Sometime before Christmas, however, the necessaries of life furnished by the Roman territories became dear, and those imported from other countries exhorbitant in price and scarce in the extreme; while these evils were attributed to monopolies practised by

Duke Braschi, and to the debasement of the coin, likewise ascribed to his pernicious councils.

At this period Spanish dollars had risen to near thirty pauls each, moneta platiale* bore an agio of fixty per cent. and upwards, and copper of full forty; while cedole, the only currency People liked to part with, was little valued by the Farmer, and almost entirely rejected by the Merchant, because foreign commodities could only be purchased with Spanish dollars. Government, however, undertook to provide a remedy for these grievances; and a most extraordinary one was administered; as, early in December, an edict appeared, importing; "That on the commencement of January copper and platiale should lose one-fourth of their nominal value, cedole of above ninety-nine scudi cease to circulate, and, further, that the value of copper and platiale should, on the commencement of February, be again diminished."

luc

* The Roman money is explained in the Appendix.

Universal discontent followed this edict: the Farmers refusing to bring poultry, corn, cattle, wood, &c. to market, if they were to be paid in money which might foon lofe all it's worth; Shopkeepers declining to fell things abfolutely needful for fubfiftence, unless compelled by the Civic Guard; while monied Men, most of whom possessed cedole to a large amount, (no one of which, perhaps, was of fo little value as ninety-nine scudi) enveighed loudly against Government, for robbing them in a manner equally scandalous and unprecedented. The markets, usually more amply supplied than in any other part of Europe, now scarcely furnished a competency of Butcher's meat; wood, heretofore cheap and plentiful to profusion, could only be purchased in small quantities and by favour; flour sufficient to supply Rome

Rome with bread was often wanted, and oil, the Italian staff of life, almost wholly unattainable, infomuch, that every oil-shop was crowded night and day with Persons importuning even for the smallest quantity that could be measured out: and, notwithstanding the interference of the Civic-Guard, hundreds of unhappy Wretches were fqueezed to death: yet, during the height of this alarming scarcity, when I visited that part of Dioclesian's Baths which the Pope used as an oil-cellar. I found fuch immense stores of oil, that I could not forbear asking the Costodi, "Why some of it was not fold to the People?" But what was my astonishment on being answered, "It had already been fold by Duke Braschi for the use of foreign countries!"

Christmas now approached, and at this feason of universal scrivity in Roman-Catholic States, the lower ranks of People, instead of giving, as had ever been their custom, tom, little fuppers to each other, found themselves compelled to go to bed at sunset, because they had no oil to surnish light, and as for tallow-candles there were none in Rome.

Thus aggrieved, the Populace began to talk in half whifpers of righting themselves; while one of our Servants assured us, there was every reason to apprehend a tumult on Innocents' day. We did not, however, credit this report, because Citizen Joseph Buonaparte, the French Minister, seemed to apprehend nothing, having recently invited Ladies of his Family to Rome, that they might be present at the marriage of his Sister-in-law with General Duphot, which was intended to be solemnized in a sew days.

On the 27th of December, however, while the upper ranks of People were dancing in the Palazzo Massimi, at a ball given to the BUONAPARTE-Family, the Officers of the Civic-Guard were hastily summoned to quarters, a riot having taken place, in attempting to quell which two Soldiers had lost their lives. BUONAPARTE shewed evident marks of concern and agitation on hearing this news, while the thinking part of the Roman Nobility trembled with apprehension, exclaiming, "That they and their country were undone!"—The Rioters, however, foon difperfed, and Rome for a few hours remained tranquil: but, at four the next morning, a revolutionary affembly was discovered in the Villa Medici, and a Patrol attacked by it's Members, who killed two of the Papal Dragoons, and attempted to difperfe the tri-coloured cockade on the Trinità de' Monti. These seditious proceedings were not apparently countenanced by BUONAPARTE; nevertheless, towards the close of day, a large body of People affembled round his Palace, calling upon him to redrefs their grievances, and flouting, "Viva la Repubblica! viva il Popolo Romano!" Still, however.

however, he gave them no apparent encouragement; but still they persevered, till the Papal Soldiers were ordered to fire; and now, on finding the tumult become ferious, BUONAPARTE, DUPHOT, and some other French Officers, ran into the Street, their heads uncovered, but their fwords drawn— BUONAPARTE, waving a white handkerchief, addressed the Crowd in Italian with, "Peace, Gentlemen, allow me to fpeak;" at which moment the Pope's Soldiers, by fome fatal miftake, fired again, fhot Du-PHOT, and grazed the hand of BUONA-PARTE, who was pulled by one of his own Servants (a Roman) into a by-lane, and from thence taken a back-way to his Palace, or he would certainly have shared Duphor's fate.

Many of the Infurgents fell before peace was reftored; all Rome took alarm; and the Spanish and Tuscan Ministers hastened to the Cardinal Secretary of State, entreating, Vol. I. M that that he would instantly send Troops to protect BUONAPARTE, and likewise go himself to apologize for the insult offered to France in the Person of her Ambassador; but fear so far subdued the Cardinal's understanding, that he rejected this prudent advice, which BUONAPARTE no sooner learnt, than he made preparations for quitting Rome, and at six the next morning departed, denouncing vengeance on the Papal Chair, and all the Sacred College, for the death of Dupleot.

Universal terror now pervaded Rome; imagination picturing the City sacked, the government overthrown, and the Pope, with all his Counsellors, murdered; while those Persons who, but the preceding day, were calling loud for a redress of grievances, now hung their heads in silence, and trembled lest their blood and that of their Families should be sacrificed to the manes of Dupper.

In

In confequence of these apprehensions the Cardinal Secretary of State was faid to write* to the papal Minister at Paris, desiring him to inform the Executive Directory, "That his Holiness felt deep concern at an accident which he could neither foresee nor prevent, and was ready to make any atonement they might think proper to prescribe;" while Cardinal Braschi was fent to Naples with power to offer a temporal jurisdiction over the ecclefiaftical territories to his Sicilian Majesty, provided he would undertake to protect them from the vengeance of France, and the still more dreaded, because more sanguinary, Troops of the Cisalpine Republic; and an idea that he might possibly accept this offer kept the Romans quiet, especially as it was reported, ere many days had

* It was difficult to come at truth respecting the conduct of the ecclesiastical Rulers in this business, as they did not publish a line upon the subject, though the French party printed a long account of the whole transaction.

M 2

elapsed,

elapsed, that Neapolitan Forces were advancing towards Terracina.

Meanwhile nothing transpired regarding BUONAPARTE, except that he had written for orders from the Directory, and that till these orders should arrive at the head-quarters of BERTHIER, who now commanded the Army of Italy, the sate of Rome must remain undecided.

During this awful, this agonizing fufpense, Priestcrast, though tottering to her fall, once more essayed to amuse the minds of the People; a two days' fast being enjoined, after which followed a pompous procession of Prelates, Monks, and Nobility of Rome, Ladies not excepted, most of them walking barefoot and uncovered from the church of Santa Maria in Vallicella to St.
Peter's, where relicks that had not seen light for a century were exhibited to public view.
All Rome attended this procession; and such was the influence of the Priests, that every every good Catholic seemed persuaded some miracle would be wrought to avert the vengeance of France, and prevent the fall of the Popedom. Thus crowned with success, the Priests continued to display their power, procession succeeding procession till the 25th of January 1798, when information was received, "That the orders of the Directory had reached Berthier, who was, in consequence, marching towards Rome." Still, however, Enthusiasm blinded Reason, and the deluded People remained convinced, that a miracle would yet disperse the approaching tempest.*

The King of Naples, who, spite of Cardinal Braschi's importunities, resolved not to oppose the French by force of arms, now sent his Minister, Prince Belmonte, to treat with Berthier, hoping, by means of

M 3 - another

* Some of the Pricfts, indeed, went fo far as to fay the miracle was performed; and actually illuminated Traftevere in consequence.

166 LETTERS FROM ITALY,

another contribution, to purchase pardon and peace for the Sacred College: but though BERTHIER professed an intention of acting with gentleness towards the Pontiff, (provided an Edict were iffued to tranquillize the minds of the People, and no public or private treasures removed from Rome) he positively refused to treat: and the Romans, electrified by this alarming news, at length began to recover from the false security into which they had been lulled. No fooner, indeed, did the Trasteverini perceive the true posture of affairs, than they anxiously demanded, "Whether their Wives and Daughters were likely to meet with infult from BER-THIER'S Troops?" and deducing from the answers of their Priests that such evils might too probably occur, they warmly petitioned for arms, declaring, "They would rather die than allow Rome to be taken."*

* It is supposed that the Chief of the Trasteverini could have raised seven or eight thousand effective Men;

Pontiff, however, folemnly enjoined them to remain quiet, adding, "That the French were his Friends, and would do no injury to his Subjects." But this affurance, though repeated in an Edict, (one of the most diagraceful that Sovereign ever issued) did not

Men; while all the lower ranks of Romans, whether in or out of Rome, were still inimical to the French, and averse to a change of government. We met with an inftance of this after the publication of his Holiness's Edict in favour of the republican Army; for, while walking in the Colifleum, (which was our daily custom) we saw a large number of Peasants enter, weeping and lamenting bitterly: we enquired what was the matter-" Alas!" replied they, "the French are come!" We told them to be comforted, as this event, however undefirable, was not likely to affect the Poor, though it might ruin the Rich. " And if the rich are rained, where shall we find bread?" returned the Peafants; "we derive it from them; can our Families be supported when we have no Master to work for, no Benefactor to supply our necessities?"

Is it possible not to lament that People so sensibly aware of the mischief produced by a levelling system, should have been prohibited from defending themselves against democratic Invaders? Is it possible not to despise the Government which issued such a prohibition, and almost to consider it's overthrow as an act of justice?"

M 4

calm

calm the fierce Trasteverini, who purchased all the gunpowder they could find, and even carried large stones and fragments of marble to their house-tops, protesting, "That, if any violence were offered to the women of their Families, they would murder every Frenchman they saw."

Meantime the ecclefiaftical Rulers, anxious to propitiate BERTHIER, not only published the Edict just alluded to, importing, "That his Holiness was full of faith in the rectitude and generofity of the French Republic, whose Army was not advancing with any hostile intention against the Romans, and ought, therefore, to be received with the utmost urbanity and friendship; nay, that every Roman who did not so receive it should be considered as a Traitor to the State, and subject to the penalty of death;" but likewise made use of other precautions to preferve quietude in the City, by trebling the patroles, planting cannon in the Piazzas, and and shutting fix of the gates: and though, in the preceding year, when BUONAPARTE approached Rome expressly for the purpose of concluding peace, a general slight was meditated by the Sacred College, and immense treasures actually sent to Terracina, now, when BERTHIER came to take vengeance for the death of DUPHOT, and rejected all terms of accommodation, the Pope remained in his Palace, very sew of the Cardinals absconded, and no valuables, whether public or private, were removed.

On the 8th of February came a Courier who reported that the French Army was within one day's march of Rome; and, moreover, that he had feen it's General in Chief, who afked, "Whether he was a Roman?" and being answered in the affirmative, replied, "I am glad of it—You must, then, be able to satisfy my curiosity respecting Rome—What is her present situation?" —"Most pitiable," returned the Courier, "the

"the People, and even the Pope himself, being half dead with fear."—"The Pope has nothing to apprehend," answered Berthier, "he is superannuated, and beneath my vengeance; his Ministers, indeed, have cause to tremble; but with the unossending part of the nation France is not at war. Go then, Friend, hasten to Rome, and quiet the minds of your Countrymen."

The Pope's Attendants, hearing their Master express sears for his personal safety, now informed him that Berthier had conversed with the newly-arrived Courier, and declared he had not a thought of offering personal violence to his Holiness. "Indeed!" cried the Pope, "and what did Berthier say of me?"—"He mentioned your Holiness with respect."—"No, no," interrupted Pius, "that I am sure he did not; but for once, if possible, tell me truth: what did he say?"—"Since your Holiness insists upon knowing, he said you were a superannuated fuperannuated old Man, beneath his notice."

—"Thank God, thank God!" exclaimed Pius, with uplifted hands, "if they do but fpare my life, I am fatisfied."

On the 9th of February the Porto del Popolo was furrounded by Priests, waiting, with fearful anxiety, for the arrival of the French, while the Flaminian way was filled with Jacobins going to meet and welcome BERTHIER. This General, however, stopped fhort of Rome, encamping the mainbody of his Forces on the Monte-Mario, and fending, on the 10th, a detachment through the Porta Angelica, to gain poffeffion of the Caftle of St. Angelo; and fo filently was this bufiness executed, that, before Rome knew her Citadel had furrendered, her seven hills likewise were occupied by republican Troops. And thus did the Pope refign his feat of empire into the power of France, without once endeavouring, for a period of near two months, which had had elapsed since the death of Duphot, to prepare for resistance, and, consequently, without being able to obtain any terms either for himself or his desenceless Subjects! a circumstance which so much surprized the French, that, on entering the City, they exclaimed to each other—"Mon Dieu, mais est-il possible qu'on nous a laisser entrer sans faire une seul condition!"—And France had the more cause to marvel at this conquest, as her Army did not consist of above sive or six thousand Men, while Rome contained near an hundred and eighty thousand Inhabitants.*

BERTHIER now iffued proclamations fignifying, "That the lives, religion, and property of the Romans who remained quietly in their houses, should be held sacred, but that

* It feemed as if the Garrison of St. Angelo, and the whole body of Civic-Guards, were bought by French gold, or they could not, spite of the Pope's commands, have permitted so weak a force to subdue them.

that the estates of all who sled should be confiscated, and themselves considered as Emigrants." Duke Braschi, however, though he remained in Rome, was not only put under an arrest, but would probly have suffered death, to appease his injured Countrymen, had it not been for the intercessions of the Spanish Minister.

On the 12th of February a confiderable body of French Troops, preceded by martial music, and followed by a magnificent train of brass ordnance, (the spoils of captive Italy) entered the Porto del Popolo, headed by Cervoni, who was appointed Commandant of Rome; and although this General and his Brother-Officers professed to be sighting for equalization, their regimentals were so costly, the trappings of their horses so spanning did, and the animals themselves so beautiful, that the tout ensemble put one in mind of Knights going to a tournament.

This detachment marched flowly down the the Corfo, through an immense crowd of Spectators; yet, scarce one hat was taken off to Cervoni, scarce one "Viva" welcomed his entrance! enough of ancient Roman spirit still remaining to inspire every breast with honest shame at the sight of the Conqueror.

CERVONI, aided by the Civic-Guard, now affumed the reins of government; and so well did his Troops conduct them-selves, that quietude and good order pervaded every part of the City, and even the Trasteverini were not heard to complain.

On the 15th of February the tree of liberty was planted in the Capitol, the temporal authority of the Pope abolished, the Roman People declared free and independent, and a provisional Government established by them, and sanctioned by Berthier; while, on the 18th, a solemn mass, followed by Te Deum, was performed at St. Peter's, in honour of the revolution; and seventeen feventeen Cardinals were compelled to affift.

Many of the Prelates and Nobles, who had rendered themselves obnoxious to the republican-party, were now arrested; others sled, and suffered confiscation of property; while others were compelled to resign their palaces to French Troops, whom they were likewise obliged to maintain.

The next object of importance was to remove the dethroned Sovereign; and, after much deliberation, the new Rulers agreed to allow his Holiness what they deemed a sufficient income, and request that he would retire into the Tuscan territories. Apartments were accordingly prepared for him at Siena: and, on the 20th of February, he was permitted to fill a covered waggon with valuables, and depart from Rome, preceded by Duke Brascht, accompanied by his Maestro-di-camera, and several othe Persons belonging to his Court and Household, and attended by an efcort of French Dragoons, to guard him from the infults of the Populace.

Thus was the ecclesiastical power completely annihilated, after continuing above twelve hundred years, and during great part of that period awing, if not governing, every monarchy in Europe; while a poor epitome, a deceitful shadow of ancient Roman freedom rose upon it's ruins!*

To the fhort-fighted eye of Human Rea-

* A little before this period the Jews held a fynod at Leghorn, in which the rabbies of all the feveral Cities throughout Italy agreed, that their Sabbath should be kept on Sunday, that their People should eat pork and other meat killed by christian Butchers, that their beards should be thaved, that married women should wear their own hair, and that the different tribes thould intermarry with each other: thus were the most material articles of the Jewish law difpensed with; while the Grand-Seignor, (if I am well informed,) annulled, about the fame time, many of the laws of Mahomet. These circumstances furnish ample scope for reflection, and, united with the fall of the Popedom, give us reason to suppose that some great religious change is speedily coming forward.

fon

fon it appeared, that the Pope and Cardinals, from the moment when BUONAPARTE first entered Italy, contributed to produce this change, by purchasing a difgraceful sufpension of hostilities, followed by a ruinous peace, inftead of arming vigoroufly to repel the Invader; by debasing their coin, and thereby injuring commerce; by monopolizing the necessaries of life till famine enfued; by iffuing an edict which violated public faith, and robbed every Citizen of his property; and when through a fatal, and as yet an unaccounted-for miftake, the French Minister was insulted, and nearly murdered, by taking no one step either to appeale his anger, or defend the Roman Territorics against the consequent vengeance of France; nay more, by affirming that a miracle would fave Rome, when the French Army was actually at her gates, and thus displaying to her Citizens the fallibility of Priestcraft. conduct was equally inexplicable to the Ro-VOL. I. man man-Catholic and the Deift, but Protestants, enlightened by a firm confidence in Holy Writ, and not blinded by the veil of Monkish Superstition, saw, or at least thought they saw, throughout the whole of this extraordinary business, the immediate hand of Heaven, rendering the Pope himself the instrument of his own destruction, and thus wonderfully bringing on the accomplishment of the Prophecies.

I cannot difmiss this subject without subjoining a few lines respecting the character of Prus VI. or what is thought to be his character by the Roman People. He was born at Cesena, (a small town of Romagna, formerly belonging to the Sabines,) in the year 1717, of a noble though necessitous Family; and seemed to owe his first promotion in the Church to Cardinal Ruffo, under whom he silled the office of Uditore, with so much diligence and faithfulness, that the Cardinal conceived an affection for him, and became became his zealous Patron. On the death of his Predecessor in the papal Chair, the Conclave was divided by two almost equally strong Parties, who, merely to gain time, agreed that they would unite in proposing Braschi, being consident he was a Man whom no Party could wish to elect: but what was their astonishment on finding that, from want of a proper explication amongst each other, they had all unintentionally con curred in voting for this Man! Te Deum now commenced; to retract would have been unavailing; and he became Pope.

Conscious that his talents by no means entitled him to fill the papal Chair, and seeling his inability to equal his Predecessor in wisdom, Braschi resolved to surpass him in superstition and a scrupulous observance of church-ceremonies, which, aided by a sine voice, a graceful manner, and an uncommonly handsome person, he personmed with peculiar dignity. His temper, like that of his Countrymen in general, is violent, and his passions are imperious; but their leader, Vanity, has induced him to display a munificence worthy of a better Prince, by draining, and making an excellent road over the Pontine-Marshes, building the noble Sacrifty of S. Pietro, completing the Museum-Clementinum, creeting Obelisks, &c. &c. The fame vanity, however, inspired a boundless wish to aggrandize his Family, and, united with blind confidence in a worthless Nephew, has proved the ultimate cause of his misfortunes. Though habitually intemperate, he is even now remarkably robust; but this may, in some measure, be attributed to conflitutional want of feeling, and a determination, in all advertities, to banish thought, and comprize happiness in the pleafures of the table. His deportment is gracious, his conversation, though not brilliant, polite and agreeable; and, to the English, he has ever been so partial, that, were he sensible of his present humiliation, it would be impossible for them not to pity him.

N 2

Digitized by Google

of

were

Having now concluded my account of the Revolution, I shall (in subsequent Letters) describe the principal Cities of Italy, specifying, by my dates, when I last visited them.

LETTER

LETTER VIII.

Genoa, October 1792.

GENOA, called La Superba, anciently a Town of Liguria, and the first which fell under the Roman yoke, appears to great advantage when viewed from a ship about one mile distant from the shore; for, then, it's stately edifices represent a vast amphitheatre, being situated on the gradual declivity of a hill.

The Harbour is capacious, but not fafe; being too much exposed to the Libecis, or fouth-west wind. The Fanale, or Light-House, is a losty tower, built on the west side of the harbour. The fortifications towards the sea are strong, being cut out of the rocks; but the naval power of this Republic, once so formidable, seems now reduced duced to a few gallies, chiefly employed in fetching corn from Sicily. Genoa is defended by two walls, one of which immediately encompasses the town, while the other takes in the rifing grounds that command it. The streets, two excepted, are not wide enough to admit the use of carriages. The roofs of the houses are flat, and frequently covered with orange-trees. is a fine stone bridge over the Bonzevera, and another over the Bifagno, the former stream washing the western, the latter the eastern side of the city.

The Cathedral, dedicated to S. Lorenzo, is a Gothic structure, incrusted and paved with marble, and adorned with a crucifixion by Bároccio. The bones of St. John Baptist are said to be deposited in one of the chapels; and the Sacrifty contains a large emerald-dish, in diameter two common palms, and in circumference more than double that number; the Genoese are N 4 supposed.

Digitized by Google

fupposed either to have chosen it as their portion of the plunder of Cæsarea, when that City was taken by the Crusaders in 1101, or to be indebted for it to the generosity of Baldwin, King of Jerusalem.

The Annonciata, though built at the fole expence of the Lomellino Family, is one of the most costly churches in Genoa, and contains an admired picture of the last supper, by G. C. Procaccino.

Sa. Maria in Carignano, built in obedience to the Will of Bendinelli Sauli, a noble Genoese, is an elegant piece of architecture, and the magnificent Bridge leading to it was crected by a Son of the abovenamed Nobleman. The church contains statues of S. Sebastiano, and the beatisted Alessandro Sauli, by Puget, with an interesting picture by D. Piola, of Saints Peter and John curing the Paralytic.

S. Ambrogio is adorned with three famous pictures, namely, the affumption, by Guido

—S.

- —S. Ignatius exorcifing a Demoniac and raifing dead Children to life, by Rubens; and the circumcifion, by the same.
- S. Domenico contains an interesting picture of the circumcission, by Procaccini; and the ceiling of the Sanctuary is by Cappucino.
- S. Filippo Neri is a fine church, the ceiling of which was painted by Franceschini; and the Oratory is adorned with a statue of the Madonna, by Puget.
- S. Matheo, built by the Doria-Family, contains monuments by Mont-Orfoli, a high alter of Florentine work, and behind it a much admired Pietà.
- S. Giovanni in Vecchio is ornamented with a celebrated picture by Vandyck.
- S. Francesco di Castelleto contains a samous picture by Tintoret, together with bronze statues and bassi-rilievi, by Giovanni di Bologna.

The Palace of the Dege is a large unornamented

mented building, erected not long fince, in consequence of a fire which consumed the ancient edifice. Statues of Andrea Dorea. and Giovanni Andrea, his Kinsman, the Liberators and Defenders of their country, are placed in the court-yard of the palace.* The great hall is spacious and elegant, and contains ftatues of Persons eminent for their liberality to the public. The Arfenal, which makes part of the Palace, contains many curious things, and, among others, the prow of an ancient Roman galley-it's length being about three spans, and it's greatest thickness two-thirds of a foot: it was discovered in the year 1597, when the harbour was cleaned. Here likewise is the armour of several Genoese Ladies, who joined in a crufade to the Holy-Land, A. D. 1301.

No town of Italy boasts so many marble edifices

* Since Genoa was revolutionized these statues have been thrown down, and the heads and hands broken off, and hung upon the tree of liberty.

edifices as Genoa. The Strada-Nuova is strikingly magnificent, and the Strada-Balbi almost equally beautiful.

The Palazzo Rosso contains a fine collection of pictures, the most celebrated of which are—three portraits by Vandyck—Judith putting Holosernes's head into a bag, by Paul Veronese—an old Man reading, by Spagnoletto—the Madonna, by Cappuccino—the adoration of the shepherds, and our Saviour in the garden of olives, by J. Bassaviour in the garden of olives, by J. Bassaviour in the garden of christians, by Caravaggio—the resurrection of Lazarus, by the same—Cleopatra, by Guercino—and several works, both in painting and sculpture, by Parodi.

The Palazzo of the Marchefe Francesco Balbi contains a large collection of pictures, the most celebrated of which are—Joseph's dream, by Cappuccino—a fair, by Bassano—the portrait of a Lady of the Balbi-Family, by Vandyck—St. John and St. Jerome, by Guido—

Guido—another St. Jerome, by the fame—and Vandyck's Wife and Child, by himfelf.

The Palazzo of Marcello Durazzo contains a confiderable number of pictures, the most celebrated of which are—the portrait of a Mother and Son—that of a Child dressed in white, and a picture of several Children, all by Vandyck; together with Democritus and Heraclitus, by Spagnoletto.

The Palazzo of Marcellino Durazzo, opposite to the College in the Strada-Balbi, contains noble rooms magnificently furnished, and a very fine collection of pictures, the most striking of which are, Seneca dying!*
—Clorinda delivering Olinda and Sophronia!!—and Phineas thrown down by Me! dusa's head, all three by L. Giordano—and the Magdalene at our Saviour's feet, by Rubens!!! The terrace belonging to this Palace commands a beautiful view.

* In deferibing painting, statues, &c. I have generally marked the most celebrated with one or more admiration points, according to their merit.

. .

The Palazzo Carega, in Strada-Nuova, was built after the design of Buonarroti; and in the same street is another Palazzo Doria, which contains a large collection of pictures.

The Palazzo Pallavicino, at Zerbino, built after the design of Buonarroti, is embellished with two celebrated pictures, the one representing Adam, Eve, and the Serpent, by Guido—the other the Soldiers casting lots for our Saviour's garment, by Valentine.

The Albergo, said to be one of the finest Hospitals in Europe, stands upon a losty eminence, and serves as an asylum to above a thousand Persons, who, from age, and other causes, are reduced to want. A Nobleman of the Brignoli-Family sounded this charity, though many other Citizens have contributed largely to it's support, and statues or busts of all the principal Benefactors are placed in the most conspicuous parts of the building. The Chapel is pretty, and contains a bassic-rilievo, rilievo, by Buonarroti, of the Madonna contemplating the dead body of our Saviour; and here likewise is an assumption in marble, by Puget.

Without the city-walls, in another Albergo, founded by one of the Feischi-Family for two hundred Orphan-Girls, each of whom receives a marriage-portion when of age to settle.

The great Hospital is a glorious establishment for the Sick of all Nations, and likewise for Foundlings, the Boys remaining till they are able to work, the Girls being maintained for ever. The number of fick in this Hospital has frequently exceeded one thousand, and that of Foundlings three thousand. Statues and busts of the principal Benefactors are placed in the most conspicuous parts of the building.

There is another Hospital of a smaller fize, which receives the Sick of the Genoese nation only.

The

The Jesuits' College, in Strada-Balbi, is a noble structure, as is the Theatre of S. Agostino.

Nothing can be more magnificent than the environs of Genoa; the whole road to Sestri, a distance of six miles, exhibiting one continued chain of villas, nearly equal in size to the palaces within the City; and one of these villas is embellished with a Garden, called English, and really deserving of that name. The Villa Durazzo contains a sine collection of natural-history.

The two best inns at Genoa are La Posta, and Il Cervo; the latter, however, is noisy, on account of some Whitesmiths' shops directly under the windows.

This City is supposed to contain one hundred and forty thousand souls, including the Fauxbourgs of Bisagno and Polcevera.

An Italian proverb fays of Genoa, "That it has fea without fish, land without trees, and Men without faith;" the provisions, however, however, not excepting fish, are excellent; but the wine is bad, and the climate by no means a fine one, especially for consumptive Persons. The country, though thinly wooded, is in some parts romantic, and even beautiful; but as to the People, they certainly may vie, in point of faith, with their Ligurian Ancestors.

The nobles are ill educated, and feldom fond of literature; they rarely inhabit the best apartments of their superb palaces, but are said to like a splendid table. Their chief gratification, however, consists in amassing wealth for the purpose of expending it upon public edifices: they govern with mildness, but encourage excessive bigotry among their Pcople, who seem, nevertheless, to be industrious, and look contented.

LETTER

LETTER IX.

Leghorn, April 1796.

NROM Genoa hither, I would counsel Travellers in general, and Invalids in particular, to come by fea, as, in case of not meeting with a deck-vessel, it is always posfible to hire a felucca fufficiently large to contain a Family and a carriage. These feluccas are open boats, which make use both of fails and oars, always keeping near shore, and in case of bad weather running immediately into harbour; a good one may commonly be hired for ten or twelve Tuscan sequins, and the passage is usually performed in a couple of days. On quitting Genoa, it is necessary to procure a bill of health. Lerici is reckoned half-way to Leghorn; and Vol. I. here here many people land and take the post to Massa di Carrara, Pietra-santa, and Pisa; the road, however, is indifferent; the inn at Massa very bad, and that at Pietra-santa, though tolerable in point of accommodations, stands in an unhealthy situation. But, to return to the sea-coast; Porto Venere is defended by two castles, near which ships pass through a narrow streight into the Gulph of Spezia, supposed to have been the Portus Lunæ of the Romans; and near the river Magra are ruins of the ancient Luna. Here the country is delightfully variegated with towns, villages, and olive gardens. Viareggio is a finall fea-port belonging to the Republic of Lucca, and famous for the excellence of it's fish. The Island of Gorgona, and the rock called Meloria, are both fituated on the right fide of the entrance into Leghorn-Harbour.

Leghorn, the Nurse-Child of the house of Medicis,

Medicis, called by the Ancients Liburnus Portus, and formerly subject to the Genoese, was the first free port established in the Mediterranean; and this political establishment, the work of Cosmo I. who exchanged the episcopal city of Sarzana for the then unimportant village of Leghorn, foon rendered the latter a place of great confequence; and by cutting feveral canals, and encouraging cultivation, he in some measure destroyed the noxious vapours which naturally proceeded from a loofe and marshy foil. The Harbour is divided into two parts, and that furthest from the shore is defended against the violence of the fea by a pier, though large vessels anchor in the roads, about two miles from the pier-head. The Light-House is built upon a fingle rock in the open sea. Leghorn, to perfons unskilled in the art of · war, scems strongly fortified, but various circumstances, I am told, would prevent it's O 2 being being tenable long, whether attacked by land or fca. The ramparts are handsome, and the high-street, from it's breadth and straightness, from the richness of it's shops, and still more from the motley crowd of all nations with which it is constantly filled, presents an object equally singular and pleasing. The great Square is spacious; and the Duomo, or Cathedral, which ferved as the model of St. Paul's Covent-Garden, is a noble edifice, defigned by Vafari. This church, the Lazarettos, the Coral-Manufactory, MICALI's shop, (in which the Grand-Duke has a large share) the Monte, or Bank, the Jews' Synagogue, the four Slaves in bronze, by P. Tacca, chained to the pedestal of Ferdinand the first's statue, which ftands in the Dock-Yard, and was done by Giovanni del Opera, the two Roman Baths of oriental granite, which are likewise in the Dock-Yard, and the Printing-House where the Encyclopedia was printed, are the things best worth seeing at Leghorn. The Opera-House is handsome, and the Persormers, generally speaking, good. Here are several inns, but WULFFEN's is the most comfortable.

O 3 LETTER

LETTER X.

Pisa, March 1798.

O little has been faid by English Travelless concerning Pifa, that I shall venture to fend you rather a minute description of this City, especially as it may with truth be called the cradle of the Arts, which, in the cleventh century, took a fecond flight from Greece to Italy, and under the guidance of Buschetto (a Grecian) produced the Cathe-Diotifalvi, in the twelfth century, crected the Baptistery; and Guglielmo, a German, and Bonanno, Pisano, began the Campanile about the year 1174. Niccolo, Pifano, Giovanni, his Son, and Andrea, Pifano, revived the art of sculpture in the thirteenth century, and not only embellished the above-mentioned buildings, but added another ther still more beautiful, namely, the Campo-Santo. In the beginning of the thirteenth century, likewise, Giunto, Pisano, revived the art of painting, and was succeeded by Giotto and Cimabue. Those Persons, therefore, who view the productions of the Greco-Pisano school as the earliest efforts of the infant arts, cannot fail of being highly gratisted; besides which, Travellers who see Pisa first, and afterwards proceed to Florence and Rome, have the advantage of tracing the gradual progress of these arts to that state of maturity which the softering care of the Medician Princes at length enabled them to attain.

Pisa, one of the twelve great cities of Etruria, stands on the banks of the river Arno, about six Tuscan miles from the sea, and sourteen from Leghorn. Strabo says it was built by the Arcadians soon after the Trojan war, while other Authors suppose it yet more ancient; and, in modern times, it O 4 has been the capital of a great Republic, whose conquering sleet was a terror to the Saracens, a scourge to the African Corsairs, and a check upon the ambition of Genoa; and with innumerable spoils, taken from the first-mentioned nation, most of the present buildings at Pisa were erected. This City is, next to Florence, the largest in Tuscany; the Streets are spacious and well-paved, the Bridges elegant, the Quay one of the finest in Europe, and the situation of the Cathedral, Baptistery, Leaning Tower, and Campo-Santo, renders these majestic edifices particularly striking and beautiful,

The Duomo, a Gothic structure in the form of a Latin cross, is remarkable for the richness and variety of it's marbles, and, next to the Duomo at Siena, perhaps the finest church of it's kind in Italy. The eastern front is ornamented with an immense number of pillars, some of which are Grecian marble, others oriental granite, and one porphyry; porphyry; among these the most striking are fix magnificent columns, which adorn the three famous bronze-doors, and are faid to be either Grecian or Egyptian workmanship. The just-mentioned doors were defigned by Giovanni di Bologna, and cast by P. D. Portigiani; that in the centre, deemed the least beautiful of the three, represents various histories of the Madonna, and is furrounded by figures of Saints and Prophets, and embellished with an elegant border of foliage, fruits, and flowers. Those on the right and left hand represent the history of our Saviour, beginning with his birth and ending with his crucifixion; they are likewife embellished with a border nearly similar to the one already described. The mofaics in the arches above the doors were done by Filippo di Lorenzo Paladini. The roof of the Cathedral is supported by seventyfour lofty pillars, fixty-two of which are oriental granite, and the rest rare marble; and although although most of these columns were originally unequal in height, and, consequently, ill adapted to match each other, yet, so well has the Architect disposed of, and added to them, that even the most observing eye perceives no want of symmetry.

Twelve altars, defigned by Buonarroti, and executed by Stagio Stagi, adorn the walls of this church. The high-altar, which is magnificently decorated with lapis lazuli, verde antico, brocatello di Spagna, bronze gilt, giallo di Siena, &c. was the gift of the late Archbishop. The Tribuna contains two porphyry columns, whose capitals and bases are peculiarly elegant; that near the epifcopal throne is ornamented with the best work of Stagi, and bears a bronze Angel, greatly admired. The decorations of the opposite pillar were done by Foggini; and the group of Angels on a golden field, which adorn the great arch, by Ghirlandajo, the Master of Buonarroti. The seats for the Canons.

Canons, a fort of wooden mosaic introduced into Tuscany in the time of Bounellesco. are worth notice. The four pictures of St. Peter, St. John, Sa. Margherita, and Sa. Caterina, are by Andrea del Sarto; and the ancient mosaic on the ceiling, representing our Saviour, the Madonna, and St. John, was executed by Gaddo Gaddi and others, in 1321. On the right fide of the great cross is the Chapel of S. Ranieri, whose farcophagus rests on a pedestal of red Egyptian granite, adorned with other precious marbles; the farcophagus is of verde di Polcevera, the altar of giallo de Siena, and the balustrades inlaid marble: the whole was executed by G. B. Foggini, at the command of Cosmo III. in honour of S. Ranieri, who died in 1161, and was proclaimed by the Pifans their Patron-Saint. This chapel contains a mosaic by Gaddo Gaddi, representing the Madonna enthroned and attended by Angels, and an antique Grecian or Roman statuc, tue, faid to be that of Mars, though now called S. Efefo. On the left fide of the great cross is the Chapel of the Holy Sacrament, which contains a ciborio * of maffy filver, and an altar adorned with filver baffirilievi, both well executed after the defigns of G. B. Foggini. The balustrades are of inlaid marble: here is a mosaic by Gaddo Gaddi, representing the annunciation. At the bottom of the church, over the bronzedoor, is a beautiful bar or gallery, ornamented with bassi-rilievi by Giovanni, the fon of Niccolo, Pisano; and it is much to be lamented that this valuable work, which originally adorned a pulpit, is now placed fo high, that it's merits are scarcely discernible: it represents Scripture historics. center aisle is a pulpit of inlaid marble, supported by two fmall pillars, the one porphyry, the other oriental brocatello; and the first is deemed particularly curious, from confifting of various pieces fo well joined, that it may properly be denominated Brec-. cia Porfirea: the second is deemed the finest specimen of it's fort in Italy. The righthand pillar, which supports the cupola, is adorned with a curious picture by F. B. Gozzoli, who lived in the fifteenth century, representing S. Tommaso d'Aquino disputing with an affembly of Doctors; and on the left-hand pillar is a beautiful St. Agnes, by Andrea del Sarto. The architrave of the eastern door was taken from an ancient edifice, and the bronze door, which fronts the Campanile, is highly esteemed for it's antiquity, though not remarkable for it's beauty. Among the pictures which I have not mentioned, those best worth notice are, the Madonna and our Saviour furrounded with Saints, attributed to Pierino del Vaga and G. A. Sogliani-S. Ranieri putting on the religious habit, by Cav. B. Luti—the death of S. Ranieri, by Cav. G. Melani, who flourished in the seventeenth century—the three Marys at the foot of the cross, by G. Bilivert—the adoration of the serpent in the wilderness, by O. Riminaldi—Habakkuk borne by an Angel, by Bilivert—Judith giving the head of Holosernes to her servant—the Madonna, our Saviour and Saints, painted by Passignano, and added to by Tempesti, a living Artist—God the Father, Raphael, and other Angels, by Salembeni—and the institution of the Lord's supper, by Tempesti.

the

* The tabernacle in which the Host is kept.

of

On the left of the bronze-door which fronts the Campanile, and fixed to the outward wall of the Cathedral, is the Sarcophagus of the Countes Beatrice, who died in 1113, and was Mother to the famous Countes Matilda, the last Descendant from the Counts of Tuscany. On this Sarcophagus is represented, in bassociation, the chace of Meleager, according to some opinions, and the the story of Phædra and Hippolitus, according to others: however, be this as it may, the merit of the work proves it an ancient production, applied in latter ages to it's present use: and it is supposed that this Sarcophagus was the model from which Niccolo, Pisano, and his Son used to study.

To the right of the Sarcophagus is a Column of oriental granite, crowned by an antique Vase, which is beautifully adorned with bassinianianian mysteries; and which seems to have been one of the vessels so much employed by the Greeks and Romans in their religious ceremonies.

The bronze Griffin on the top of the Cathedral is a curious antique intaglio, imagined to be Egyptian workmanship.

The Baptistery, a German-Gothic structure, is an octagon of white marble; the principal door is embellished with two large and and two small columns, similar to those which adorn the bronze-gates of the Duomo.

The infide of this edifice refembles an ancient Heathen temple. Twelve arches, supported by eight vast columns of Sardinian granite, and four pilasters of white marble, ferve as the base to a second row of pilasters, on which rests the cupola. The capitals, both of pillars and pilasters, are antique. The Font, clevated on three steps of beautiful white marble, is adorned with intagli and mosaics, so well executed, that they appear to have been done long before the building. On the margin are four places for the immersion of Infants, and, in the centre, a large bason for the immersion of Adults: this practice of immersion, however, has been abandoned ever fince the thirteenth century. The Pulpit, one of Niccolo Pifano's best works, is supported by nine columns of precious marble, and ornamented mented with baffi rilievi formed out of oriental alabaster and Parian marble. The first piece represents the birth of our Saviourfecond, the adoration of the Magi-third, the presentation in the temple—fourth, the crucifixion, (much inferior to the rest)fifth, the last judgment. This Baptistery was finished in 1153, at which period the City is faid to have been fo populous, that a voluntary contribution of one florin from every Family sufficed to pay for this noble edifice. Pifa, at the period above-mentioned, was supposed to contain 13,400 Families. and, reckoning five Perfons to each Family, the number of Inhabitants will amount to 67,000-more than double the present number.

The Campanile, or Leaning Tower, is of a circular form, ninety-five Florentine braccia in height, and about feven braccia and a half, or thirteen feet, out of it's perpendicular. This beautiful edifice confifts of eight stories, Vol. I. P adorned adorned with two hundred and feven columns of granite and other marbles, many of which have evidently been taken from ancient According to the opinion of the buildings. most respectable Writers, it appears that this Tower originally was straight, though some accidental cause, such as an earthquake, the great fire of Pifa, or the natural loofeness of the foil, has produced it's present extraordinary inclination: and in that part of the Campo-Santo where the life of S. Ranieri is painted, we see this now leaning Tower perfeetly ftraight, and confisting of seven stories only: may not, therefore, the eighth flory, which rather inclines on the contrary fide to the others, have been added, in latter times, as a balance to prevent the whole building from falling.

The Campo-Santo, or ancient burial-ground, the most elegant building at Pisa, and unique perhaps in it's kind, is a vast rectangle surrounded by sixty-two light and elegant Gothic areaden arcades of white marble, and paved with the fame. Archbishop Ubaldo Lanfranchi (who was Contemporary with Richard Cœur-delion, and his Brother-Warrior in the Holy Land,) brought to Pifa a large quantity of earth from Mount Calvary, and deposited it on the fpot round which the walls of the Campo-Santo are now erected; he is, therefore, supposed to have given the first idea of this building in 1200; and eighteen years afterward, the present structure was commenced under the direction of Giovanni, Pifano, who finished it in 1283. The statues over the principal door are by Giovanni, Pifano, they stand in a kind of temple, and among them is the Sculptor himself kneeling to the Madonna. The Sarcophagi under the arcades are chiefly of Parian marble. Round the walls are tempera-paintings of the fourteenth and fifteenth century, which, however deficient in many respects, cannot but yield pleafure to those who wish, on their P 2 entrance entrance into Italy, to view the works of the Revivers of an art afterwards carried to fuch exquisite perfection. In the first division of the arcade on the western wall, are six large pictures representing the life of S. Ranieri, the three upper ones by Simone Memmi, the three under ones by Antonio, called Veneziano; and peculiarly valuable on account of the costume accurately preserved in them all; and likewise because they shew how ships were armed and rigged in the days of S. Ranieri. In one of these pictures is the Campanile: they all are supposed to have been begun in 1300. The fecond division contains fix paintings representing the life and death of Saints Efeso and Potito, and done by Spinello Spinelli, Arctino, about the year 1400. The third division of the arcade contains fix paintings representing the hiftory of Job, by Giotto; fo injured, however, by the hand of time, that it is difficult to distinguish them, although they were retouched touched by Maruscelli in 1623. The remaining paintings in this arcade are faid to have been done by Nelli di Vanni, Pisano. The two first pictures in the second areade represent the history of Esther, by Ghirlanda, retouched, however, by Aurelio or Baccio Lomi. The fecond division contains the history of Judith, which is modern, ill-done, and damaged. The first division of the northern arcade contains four pictures representing the creation, by Buffalmacco, who flourished in the beginning of the fourteenth century. The other paintings which adorn this arcade, (those excepted which are over the doors of the chapels), represent the principal events in the book of Genesis, and were begun by B. Gozzoli in 1484, and finished in the short space of two years. The first of these numerous pictures contains the famous Vergognosa di Campo-Santo, and over the chapel-door is the adoration of the Magi, by which work Gozzoli established

Р з

214 LETTERS FROM ITALY,

ed his reputation among the Pifans, and prevailed with them to employ him in painting their Campo-Santo, not merely on account of the general merit of the picture, but because it exhibited an excellent likencss of his Mistress, a Pisan-Girl, whom he drew to display his imitative powers. Over the fame door is the annunciation, attributed to Stefano, Fiorentino; and the fifth lower picture from this is particularly interesting, as it contains feveral portraits of illustrious Men, and among them that of the great Lorenzo de' Medici. Over the door of the second chapel is the coronation of the Madonna, by Taddeo Bartoli; and in the fifth lower picture beyond this chapel are portraits of other illustrious Men, among whom the Painter has placed himself, though his figure is almost totally obliterated. These works by Gozzoli are, generally speaking, the best preferved of any in the Campo-Santo. paintings of the eastern arcade, so far as the chapel-chapel-door, are by Zaccaria Rondinosi, Pifano, and were done in 1666; they represent the hiftory of King Ozia and Balteshazzar's Beyond the chapel are three paintings, faid to be by Buffalmacco, representing the crucifixion, refurrection, and afcension of our Saviour. The next picture, which is in that part of the fouthern arcade not already described, represents the triumphs of Death, and was done by Andrea Orcagna, who flourished in the middle of the fourteenth century: it contains feveral portraits. The fecond large picture, by the same Master, is the universal judgment, in which Solomon is represented as dubious whether he may go to Heaven or Hell. The next picture, or rather a compartment of the last, represents Dante's Inferno, and was done by Bernardo Orcagna, Brother to Andrea, and restored by Sollazzino, who flourished about the year 1530. The fourth picture represents the history of the Anchorites, by Laurati, a Dif-P 4 ciple ciple of Giotto's; and over the great door is an affumption, by Simone Memmi, one of the best preserved pictures of the fourteenth Here ends my description of the paintings of the Campo-Santo; and it is remarkable, that among the immense number of countenances contained in these paintings we fcarcely find two alike. The faces, generally speaking, are well done, the figures and drapery stiff, the perspective bad, and the borders, which form the feveral compartments, particularly clegant. Among the monuments is that of Count Algarotti, erected by Frederick the Great of Prussia, but remarkable only for the beauty of the marble: near it is the Sarcophagus of G. F. Vegio, by Taddo; and in the eastern arcade is the monument of Filippo Decio, who had it erected in his life-time, giving as a reason, "That he feared posterity would not have done it for him." This monument is by Stagio Stagi, and beautifully executed. Under der Orcagna's picture of the triumphs of Death, stands an ancient Roman mile-stone, which was discovered on the Emilian-way near Rimazzano, and from thence transported to Pisa; and on either side of this column is an inscription, the one to the memory of Lucius, the other to that of Caius Cæsar, the adopted Sons of Augustus. Among the Sarcophagi is one, thought to be that of Alexander Severus and Julia his Wise. Six hundred ancient Families of Pisa, besides many illustrious Men of different nations, are said to be interred in the Campo-Santo.

The Chiesa de' Cavallieri, or Church of S. Stefano, from whom the square in which it stands is named, was built by Vasari; the high-altar is of beautiful porphyry, so likewise is the sarcophagus above it, reputed to contain the bones of St. Stephen, and the bronze chair, suspended over the sarcophagus, was presented by Innocent XII. to Cos-mo

218 LETTERS FROM ITALY,

mo III. On the ceiling are fix paintings relative to the Knights of S. Stefano, the two first by J. Ligozzi, the two next by Jacopoda Empoli, the fifth by Cigoli, and the last, to represent the Grand-Duke Cosmo I. receiving the habit of the order, by C. Allori. The walls and ceiling are hung with trophics taken from the Insidels by the Knights of S. Stefano. This church contains a very curious organ, a nativity, by Bronzino, and a filver crucitix, by Algardi.

The Palazzo de' Cavallieri, fituated in the fame fquare, was built by Vafari; and over the principal entrance are bufts of fix Grand-Mafters of the order, beginning with Cofmo I. who inflituted these Knights in 1561, to defend the Mediterranean against Turks and Corfairs by means of galleys, on board of which every Knight was obliged to serve three years ere he could be finally received into the order: but when peace was established between Barbary and Tuscany, the Knights

Knights and their galleys became useless, infomuch, that the latter were, in 1755, all broken up and destroyed.

Near to the Palazzo de' Cavallieri there formerly stood a tower, now totally demolished, which was called The Tower of Famine, from having been the prison of Ugolino.

The Church of S. Fredriano, which is supported by pillars of oriental granite with ancient capitals, contains a painting of our Saviour on the cross, done in the thirteenth century, by Giunta, Pisano.

The Church of S. Anna contains a curious antique representation of our Saviour on the cross, wrought in wood on the tabernacle of the high-altar; and this wooden sculpture, of which there are several specimens in Pisa, is attributed to G. Giacobbi, Pisano.

The Church of S. Caterina contains a curious picture by F. Traini, one of the most skilful Disciples of Andrea Oreagna: this by the Fathers of the Church, among whom is a portrait of Urban VI.; at the feet of these are several Philosophers and Heretics, with their works torn in pieces, and, what is very remarkable, St. Thomas himself is placed between Plato and Aristotle, who are presenting him with their literary productions.

The Church of S. Paolo all Orto contains a head of our Saviour, which appears to have been done in the twelfth century.

The Church of S. Francesco, supposed to have been built by Niccolo, Pisano, contains a Chapel, called that of S. Antonio da Padova, painted by Salembeni and Maruscelli—a Chapel painted by Passignano, together with a Madonna and Child, said to have been done in the sourcenth century—another Chapel near the Sacristy, said to have been painted by Spinello, Arctino, who likewise did the large picture over the Sacristy crifty door—a picture in the Sacrifty, by Giotto, of S. Francesco receiving the Elect—and in the Sacrifty-Chapel, the Madonna and Saints, painted in 1395, by T. Bartoli. In the Cloisters, to the right of the little steps which lead into the church, the bones of Ugolino, his Sons, and Nephews, are supposed to have been deposited.

The Church belonging to the Confervatorio of S. Silvestro, contains two antique paintings by Guidotti, and a small basso-risievo in terra cotta, attributed to Lucca della Robbia, who invented the ancient paintings upon glass.

The Church of S. Mattee, built by the the Brothers Melani, is remarkable for the fresco-paintings of the just-named Artists, which are so skilfully managed as to make the roof appear wonderfully higher than it really is.

The Church of S. Pierino, supposed to have been an ancient Heathen temple, contains tains an antique Madonna painted on the wall, and a crucifix, by Giunto, Pifano. The ornaments without-fide of the great door are ancient and beautiful; the pavement is of pietri duri; and under this edifice is an ancient bone-house, which contains two Etruscan farcophagi of Parian marble, together with paintings in the style of those which adorn the Campo-Santo.

The Church of S. Michele in Borgo, builty it is faid, before the eleventh century by Guglielmo, Pifano, is incrusted with Cerulean marble, supported by antique columns of granitello, and adorned with a marble crucifix, wrought by Niccolo, Pifano, and originally placed in the Campo-Santo; the Madonna under this crucifix is one of the most ancient paintings in Pifa. The cupola, the upper nave, the vision of S. Romualdo, the expedition to Majorca and Minorca, and the institution of the Foundling Hospital, are all painted by Guidetti.

The

The Church of S. Vito, or, more properly speaking, the Chapel of S. Ranieri, contains a fresco-painting, representing the death of the Saint, and executed by Tempesti in his best manner; the architectural ornaments which surround it are by Ciosso, a living Artist.

The Church of La Spina exhibits choice monuments of ancient sculpture, namely, the Madonna and Child, St. John and St. Peter, by Nino, Pisano, one of the Revivers of the art; two sigures attributed to Moschino, and a half-length Madonna, by Nino.

The Church of S. Andrea in Chinfeca contains a valuable monument of the Greco-Pifano ichool, namely, our Saviour on the cross, which appears to have been done in the thirteenth century.

The Church of S. Martino contains a crucifix by Giunta, Pifano.*

Digitized by Google

* The churches at Pifa contain many paintings by old Tufcan Matters which I have not mentioned; and a minute description of them may be found in Morrow None of Pifa.

The

The Palazzo Lanfranchi, on that fide of the Arno called Parte di mezzo-giorno, was built after the defign of Buonarroti.

The Palazzo Tonini contains two pictures in tempera from Taffo's Gerusalemmo, begun by Melani, and finished by Tomması, his Scholar.

The Palazzo Lanfreducci, which is incrusted with statuary marble, has a chain and these words over the door; "Alla Giornata;" many tales are told in consequence, but none of them seem sufficiently authenticated to be worth relating. This palace contains a celebrated picture by Guido, the subject of which is sacred and profane Love, represented by two Boys.

Casa Mecherini, on the opposite side of the Arno, which is called Parte di Tramontana, contains a celebrated Sibyl, by Guercino, with frescos, by Tempesti and Ciosso.

The Palazzo Seta, in Via S. Cecilia, contains tains frescos by the Brothers Melani, and a gallery of pictures.

The Palazzo del Publico, and the Palazzo do' Priori, contain paintings by the Brothers Melani, &c.

In the Grand-Duke's Palace are two beautiful miniature pictures, which hang in the royal bed-room; the ceilings are painted with clegance, and the furniture, though plain is handsome.

The Hospitals are spacious; and the Loggia de' Banchi and Casino Nobili are elegant marble buildings.

The University of Pisa was sounded by the Emperor Henry VII. though, in consequence of civil wars, it became almost annihilated till the reign of Cosmo I. by whom it was re-established on the present plan in 1543: it has produced many, if not more learned Men than any other public seminary in Italy.

Vol. I.

Q

The

226 LETTERS FROM ITALY,

The Torre della Specola, or Observatory of Pisa, was erected about the year 1735, and is furnished with good instruments, and conducted by an eminent Astronomer and Mathematician, MR. Slop.

The botanical Garden was founded by Ferdinand, second Son of Cosmo I. it is tolerably well stored with plants, aloes especially; and Mr. Santi, the Professor of Natural History and Director of the Garden, takes great pains to encrease the collection. Mr. Santi's literary productions speak his abilities; and one observation with respect to this Gentleman I will venture to make, because it is justified by my own experience, that every Traveller who has letters of recommendation to him is fortunate.*

* The botanical Garden and Cabinet of Natural History are usually open from ten till twelve in the morning, and from four till fix in the evening. Cathedrals in Italy are always open from sun-rise till sunfet; other churches generally open at fix or seven in the

the morning, shut at twelve, open again at three in the afternoon, and shut at six. Palaces are usually shewn from nine in the morning till twelve, and from three till six in the afternoon. The usual fee throughout Italy, if a church be opened for you, is half a paul; and at a palace, four pauls. At Pisa you generally give for seeing the Campanile a livre, and the same at the Baptistery, Campo-Santo, ancient Vapour-Bath, and Modern Baths.

Q 2

LETTER

LETTER XI.

Pifa, March 1798.

HERE seems little doubt that Pisa was a Roman Colony, often vifited by the Cæsars; and Ncro, about the year 57, is faid to have made an excursion to this city, with which he was fo much pleafed, that he embellished it by a magnificent Palace, and a Temple dedicated to Diana, at the entrance of the Lucca-gate. This Temple was built in the form of a rotunda, all of marble without, the ceiling being an imitation of the starry firmament, the internal decorations oriental marble columns, with various pieces of sculpture and painting; the payement Egyptian marble, and the statue of the Goddess stood in its center. Whether the Palace did or did not enclose this this Temple is unknown; but the former is described as being highly ornamented, and of a vast extent, containing Baths, Gardens, and Fish-ponds; and it is added that Nero, in order to have it amply supplied with water, built the Aqueduct of Monti-Pisani, which extended from Caldaccoli to the Lucca-gate. Such is the account given of Nero's Temple and Palace; and it is certain that the buildings called Ipocausti, or Sweating-Baths, extended from the Duomo to the vicinity of the Monastry of S. Zenone; it is equally certain that foundations of immense buildings have been discovered in the gardens which now occupy the space between the Church of S. Zenone and the Duomo, that numberless pieces of marble are feen in the walls and buildings which at present stand upon the above-named space; and two ruins near the Lucca-gate, one of which has been recently demolished, were evidently parts of the Sweating-Baths; and  $Q_3$ thefe these circumstances concur, with several others, to cstablish the truth of what I have just written. The most respectable remains of these antiquities is the Vapour-Bath, situated in a garden close to the Lucca-gate: this bath is an octagon, with four femi-circular niches, in the upper part of which are terra-cotta tubes of a triangular shape. Opposite to the entrance there appears to have been a place referved for fome marble ornament. The roof forms a femi-circle, and contains eight places to admit light, besides an octagon aperture in the centre. pavement leading to the great furnace was made of calciftruzzo, with a furface of marble one finger thick, for persons to walk or lie down upon. It is probable that under this marble pavement there were vaulted rooms, where the Attendants kept up perpetual fires; and fome People imagine, that under every niche were vascs filled with water, which, on being heated by the fires, impregnated pregnated the apartments with vapour. Ancient Baths always consisted of four apartments distinguished by the appellations of freddo, tiepido, caldo, and sudatorio, or stufa; and the apartment called tiepido in the Men's bath always communicated with the fame apartment in the Women's; and there is no doubt but the bath just described confifted of four apartments, as traces of them may yet be discovered. From the appearance of the bath now remaining, it feems to have been lined throughout with marble; and the fix Grecian pillars on the fides of the bronze-gates of the Cathedral, together with the other two which ornament the principal door of the Baptistery, are supposed to have been taken out of this building. The garden adjoining to the bath contains orange-trees above fifty feet high, and one yard and a quarter round the trunk. In this garden, likewise, is the ancient Monastry of S. Zenone, vulgarly called St. Zeno, of which. Q 4 which, however, the Church only remains, and in it are Sarcophagi, which, though mutilated and almost defaced, still possess fusficient beauty to make us execrate the hand of avarice or barbarism, which has thus destroyed these valuable remains of Grecian sculpture.

A house belonging to the noble Family Da Paulie, seems to have been formed out of the ruins of an ancient theatre, judging from the granite columns of different orders discoverable in the walls; and here I must observe, that the Tuscans are famed for having invented amphitheatres, together with the games called Curuli, and Certami dei Cavalli.

In the now suppressed Church of S. Felice are two columns of oriental granite, whose capitals are adorned with mythological figures, supposed to represent Jupiter, Harpocrates, Diana, Minerva, Isis, Ceres, and Genii: they probably belonged to a Roman temple, temple, on the fite of which the Church of S. Felice is faid to have been erected: the sculpture seems to be of Septimus Severus's time.

The fubterranean part of S. Micheli in Borgo deserves notice: the pillars and walls are of pietre verracanne; the roof is tuso, and curiously ornamented with arabeschi, resembling those which adorn Livia's baths at Rome, and not unlike in style to the paintings sound in Herculaneum. This building could not have been a Christian church, because the primitive Christians adorned their churches with nothing but quotations from Holy-Writ, therefore it must, in all probability, have been erected previous to the time of Constantine.

The Aqueduct of Caldaccoli, so called from the hot springs which supply it, is supposed to be that built by Nero: eight arches may still be seen at the distance of about two hundred yards from the modern Baths of Pisa, Pifa, and ruins of the whole are discoverable between this spot and the Lucca-gate.

No vestiges remain of the ancient Port of Pisa, mentioned by Strabo; but it is supposed to have been situated near the mouth of the Arno, and not far from Leghorn.

The modern Baths, situated about three miles and a half to the north of Pisa are elegant, commodious, and surrounded by several good lodging-houses. Two large fragments of columns, with two capitals, which bear marks of remote antiquity, together with several other concurring circumstances, lead us to imagine these modern Baths occupy the same ground with those mentioned by Strabo and Pliny.

The Mountain of S. Giuliano, which rifes immediately above the Baths, exhibits fome curious caverns, which feem to indicate figns of an extinct volcano.

The modern Aqueduct, begun by Ferdinand I and finished by his fon, Cosmo II.

is

is a magnificent work, worthy the Princes of the House of Medicis. It commences at a village called Asciano, and reaches from thence to Pisa, a distance of four miles.

The Canal, which extends from Pifa to Leghorn, was made by Ferdinand I.

The Royal Farm, or Cascina, near Pisa, fituated in an extensive and beautiful forest of cork-trees, ever-green oaks, &c. and washed by the sea, is particularly well worth notice, as it contains some hundreds of Camels, who, though Foreigners, breed here, and are employed as beafts of burden. The Cafcina is open to the public; some parts of the forest, however, are not so; but Travellers who apply for the Grand-Duke's permission to ride or drive in those parts, seldom meet with a refusal. The late Grand-Duke, Leopold, was the first Person who attempted to breed Camels in Italy, and fo prolific are these animals, that from one couple couple only originate the number above-

The Nobility of Pisa and the Gentlemen belonging to the University are remarkably polite and friendly to Foreigners, the lower classes of People civil and humane, but exacting. The Peasantry appear rich and happy; for the Tuscan Farmer, according to the laws of Leopold, divides the produce of the land with his Master, and consequently lives well.

There are two inns at Pisa, The Hussaro and The Post; the former is the better house, but the latter has the advantage in point of situation; both are tolerably good, though by no means so comfortable as private lodgings; and with regard to the last, I would counsel Travellers in general, and Invalids in particular, to reside on that side of the quay called, della parte di mezzo-giorno; for, on the opposite side, and in many of the streets and squares, the houses are damp, damp, and consequently unwholesome. New houses are to be avoided here, and in every other part of Italy, it being generally three, four, nay, sometimes five years ere the walls become dry. Houses not built on arches are likewise to be avoided; and groundfloors, in winter, spring, and autumn, are unwholesome, though very healthy in summer.

The fountain-water of Pifa, which flows through the aqueduct, is perhaps the finest in Italy; and Travellers should be especially careful to send daily for this water, because that introduced by means of wells into the houses is seldom sit either for drinking or kitchen use.

The Theatre here is capacious, but not fo elegant as that at Leghorn.

The three bridges, as I have already mentioned, are very handfome, especially the middle one, which is built of marble and pietra verrucano; and the mock-fight usually exhibited exhibited every third year on this bridge is, perhaps, the only remaining veftige of those athletic games heretofore fo famous among the Greeks and Romans. The amusement confifts in a battle fought by nine hundred and fixty Combatants, who, clothed in coats of mail, and armed with wooden clubs, difpute for forty-five minutes the passage of the bridge. The strongest Combatants possess themselves of the sield of battle; and when it is possible to employ stratagem, they never let flip the opportunity; but to fight in earnest is forbidden; nevertheless, this mock encounter frequently costs lives, and is, therefore, but seldom permitted, though one of the most beautiful spectacles in Italy. Some Authors tell us it was instituted by Pelops, Son of Tantalus, King of Phrygia; others think it was established by Nero; while others believe it to have been origiginally celebrated in memory of the defeat of Musetto, King of Sardinia, which happened pened in the year 1005, upon a bridge at Pisa; but, whoever the Institutor might be, the amusement is entered into by the Pisans with a degree of spirit that beggars all description.

There is likewise every third summer a fingular and most beautiful Illumination here, in honour of S. Ranieri. On this night the whole Lung'-Arno appears like one immense crescent of magnificent and regularly built palaces, studded over with innumerable quantities of diamonds, some in the Tuscan, others in the Gothic, and others in the grotesque, or Chinese style of architecture (which participates fo much of the Egyptian, that many People believe the Chinese were originally an Egyptian Colony). Add to this the three bridges, ornamented with temples, palaces, and arabefques, all blazing with jewels; and fuch is the scene which Pisa presents to the view at this general illumination. No wonder, therefore, that Ariofto ofto is faid to have borrowed images from fo fplendid and fo fingular an exhibition, which can only be likened to an enchanted city.

The immense length and beautiful curve of the Pisa quay, contribute greatly to the splendor of the two above-named exhibitions, the ground being so shaped, that all the spectators are seen at once, whether in balconies, carriages, on foot, or in boats upon the river; and the same cause renders the Carnival at Pisa particularly beautiful, for, during the last week of this whimsical amusement, the whole quay is filled with Masks from three in the afternoon till the commencement of the Opera, when most of them adjourn thither.

LETTER

LETTER XII.

Pisa, April 1796.

TE have just made an excursion to the City and Baths of Lucca, the former of which, called L'industriosa, is beautifully fituated about fourteen Tuscan miles from Pifa, in a luxuriant valley, encircled by the Apennine, and watered by the river Serchio. It is defended by eleven baftions of brick, and perhaps the most beautiful ramparts in the world, which, from being planted with large trees, give this City the appearance of a fortified wood, with a watch-tower in its centre. These ramparts are three miles round, and form a delightful promenade either on foot or in a carriage. Over the Pifa-Gate is written, Libertas; and it is impossible to pass this Vot. I. R gate gate without feeling high respect for a Town which, even during the plenitude of Roman despotism, maintained its own laws and fome degree of liberty; and which, fince that period, has always continued free. The territory contains about four hundred fquare miles, and one hundred and twenty thousand People. Cæsar wintered at Lucca after his third campaign in Gaul; and, according to Appian of Alexandria, all the Magistrates of Rome came to visit him, infomuch, that two hundred Roman Senators were feen before his door at the fame moment: which circumstance rather proves Lucca to have been at that period a large City. The streets are broad, well paved, and clean, but irregular.

The Cathedral, erected in 1070, though unpromising without side, is a fine Gothic building within, and contains on the right of the great-door the tomb of Adalbert, surnamed the rich, who lived in the beginning of the tenth century, and from whom, according cording to MURATORI, descended the Princes of Est, and the House of Brunswick-Hanover, now Sovereigns of Great-Britain. The samous Countess Matilda, was a Descendant from the above-mentioned Adalbert; and this Princess, the Daughter of a Duke of Lucca, who died in 1052, reigned over Tuscany, Lombardy, and Liguria, maintaining desperate wars for thirty successive years against the Schismatics and Anti-Popes, till, at length, he chased the Emperor, Henry IV.; out of Italy, and restored to the church its ancient possessions.

The Palazzo Publico contains good pictures; and in the Armoury are arms for twenty-five thousand Citizens, though an English Gentleman, who understands these things, tells me the musquets are not worth a farthing. Our Courier, who has great bodily strength, attempted to put one of the smallest ancient helmets on his head, but found himself scarcely able to lift it—so much are men degenerated!

The remains of the ancient Amphitheatre are discoverable on the spot called Prigioni vecchie.

The police of Lucca has long been famed for its excellence; the upper ranks of people are worthy, learned, opulent, and cheerful; and the Peafants remarkably good Hufbandmen. SIGNORA TERESA BANDETTINI LANDUCCI, furnamed by the Arcadian Academy, AMARILLA ETRUSCA, is a Lucchefe, and the most celebrated Improvisatrice who now exhibits in Italy. Two good inns are generally kept open at Lucca.

The distance from hence to the Bagniealdi is about eighteen miles; the beginning of the road is good, the latter part steep, stony, and, in many places, much too narrow; it winds almost constantly by the side of the Serchio, and is cut out of rocks, clothed with olives and chestnuts, and adorned with convents, castles, and cottages. thing can be more romantic than this drive; and on the way are three extraordinary bridges, the first consisting of two immense arches, not in a straight line with each other, but forming in the centre a confiderable an? Neither do these arches support a level road; on the contrary, you afcend one arch, and descend it again; you then come to an angle of flat ground, after which you ascend the other arch, and descend that, till you reach a fmaller arch, which brings you to the opposite shore of the Serchio. The height of this bridge we could not precifely ascertain; but, judging from the eye, it is nearly equal to that of Augustus at Narni. The second bridge is similar to the first; but the third, which confifts of only one large arch, is by far the loftiest, and, according to oral tradition, was the work of the Devil, who really feems to have been, in the R 3 opinion

ed

246 LETTERS FROM ITALY,

opinion of the Italians, a great Architect, for every extraordinary building is attributed to him. Other accounts, however, say, these three bridges were crected by the Countess Matilda; and one of the Postillions, who drove us to the Bagni, told me, they were built in the year 1002; an extraordinary circumstance that he should have been so accurate a Chronologist! but the common People of Italy are wonderfully well-informed respecting the history of their own country, and so fond of its Poets, as frequently to know their works by heart.

The Bagni-caldi di Lucca are situated on the side of a romantically picturesque mountain, thickly clothed with chestnut-trees, and embellished with numberless cottages. There are several Lodging-Houses at these Baths, but provisions are not plentiful; that is, little variety can be found for a table. And during the months of July and August the situation must be a very hot one; but in May, June, and September, it cannot fail to charm those Persons who like solitude. Carriages are of little or no use at the Bagnicaldi, but their want is well supplied by chaises-à-porteur. There is a good Lodging-House at the Bagni della Villa in the plain.

Lovers of botany should visit, during the month of May, a spot near Lucca, called Monte Fiorita, which is, at the above-named season, enamelled with a larger number, and a greater variety of flowers than fall to the share perhaps of any other hill in Europe.

R 4 LETTER

LETTER XIII.

Florence, March 1798.

LORENCE, in Italian, Firenze, which fignifies, in the Etruscan language, a red lily, (actually the arms of the city,) has deservedly acquired the appellation of La Bella; it stands in a luxuriant, beautiful, and extensive plain, surrounded by mountains of the Apennine, and is faid, by some Authors, to have been an ancient town of Etruria, afterwards inhabited by the Phænicians; while others suppose it to have been founded by Sylla's Soldiers, or by the People of Fiefole; and one thing feems certain, namely, that the choicest part of Cæsar's Army was fent to colonize at Florence, (then called Florentia), about fixty years before the birth of our Saviour; and under the dominion minion of the Roman Emperors it became one of the most considerable cities of Etruria, and was embellished with a Hippodrome, a Campus Martius, a Capitol, an Amphitheatre, and a road called Via Cassia.

So many excellent accounts of Florence have been already given, that it would feem like arrogance in me to enlarge much upon the fubject. I will, therefore, content myfelf with mentioning, in a fummary manner, the objects best worth a Traveller's attention.

The Palazzo Vecchio was built by Arnolfo, the Disciple of Cimabue; and before the entrance is a group in marble of David slaying Goliah, by Buonarroti—on the ceiling and walls of the great-hall are the most celebrated actions of the Florentine Republic and the house of Medicis, all by Vasari, except four pictures in oil, one representing the coronation of Cosmo 1. by Ligozzi—another the Ambaffadors from different states to Boniface VIII. by Ligozzi—a third, the election of Cosmo I., by Cigoli—and a fourth the institution of the order of S. Stefano, by Passignano. In this hall, likewise, is a Statue of Victory, with a Prisoner at her seet, by Buonarroti!—and another group of Virtue triumphing over Vice, by Giovanni di Bologna! The exploits of Furius Camillus are painted in tempera, by Salviati, in the Salla dell' Udionzo vecchia.

The Loggia of the Palazzo Vecchio was built after the defign of Andrea Orcagna, and is adorned with statues of Judith and Holosernes in bronze, by Donatello—Perseus with Medusa's head in bronze, by Benvenuto Cellini—a young Roman Warrior carrying off a Sabine Virgin, and her Father prostrate at his feet, with the rape of the Sabines in basso-rilievo on the pedestal, by Giovanni wanni di Bologna!!—two lions in marble, brought from the Villa Medici at Rome—and fix antique statues of Sabine Priestesses.

The Piazza before the Palazzo Vecchio contains a noble Fountain erected by Cosmo I., after the design of Ammannati—and an equestrian Statue of Cosmo I. in bronze, by Giovanni di Bologna, to whom the Sea-Nymphs and Tritons, which surround the fountain, are likewise attributed.

The Fabbrica degli Ufizi, which comprehends the royal Gallery, was built by Vafari—the exterior part of the edifice is decorated with Doric columns, which form two magnificent porticos, united at one end by an arch that supports the apartments occupied by Courts of Justice; and over this arch is a Statue of Cosmo I., by Giovanni di Bologna, together with recumbent sigures or Equity and Rigour, by Vincenzo Danti.

The Royal Gallery of Medicis contains fo many chef-d'œuvres of art, that Artists only can can do it justice in description;* added to which, the mode of arranging its contents is so frequently changed, that it is impossible to point out the spot where any one particular thing may be found; but the best method of viewing the whole with convenience and advantage, is to appropriate one entire morning to each Cabinet, and three or four to the Anti-rooms and Corridors.†

The

* In my account of the Pictures best worth notice at Florence, Rome, Naples, Bologna, Venice, Vienna, and Dresden, I have been materially affisted by the judgment of Mr. Artaud, a young Painter, who is travelling at the expence of our Royal Academy, and whose distinguished abilities and close application have already placed him, in the opinion of foreign Connoisseurs, at the head of his elegant and fascinating Art.

† This Collection, in the year 1798, was arranged as follows:

First Anti-room.—A statue of Mars, and another of Silenus holding an infant Bacchus, both in bronze—ten busts of the Princes of the house of Medicis, among which is that of the great Lorenzo—four bassi rilievi.

Second Anti-room.—A horse in marble, supposed to have

The Palazzo Pitti was begun after the defign of Filippo di Ser Brunellesco, the most celebrated Architect of the fifteenth cenhave originally belonged to the group of Niobe and her Children!!!—A wild-boar in marble, faid to be Grecian fculpture!!!—two columns adorned with military trophies, on the top of one the buft of Jove, on the other that of Cibele—four statues in marble—two dogs in marble—buft of Leopoldo.

First Corridor.—The ceiling of this immense gallery is adorned with arabesques—round the walls (near the ceiling) are portraits of the most renowned characters of antiquity, comprehending Generals, Statesmen, Literati, and Princes—and on the left-hand wall, below the portraits, are paintings of the Florentine-school. Here likewise are busts of nearly all the Roman Emperors, several statues, and many fine sarcophagi, one of which, in the centre of the gallery near the door of entrance, is particularly celebrated.

First Cabinet.—The Hermaphrodite, Greek sculpture, and very similar to that in the Villa Borghese at Rome!!!—busts of Alexander! Jove, Junius Brutus, and Cicero—a statue called Genio della Morte—an infant Hercules—together with many other statues, busts, and bassi-rilievi.

Second Cabinet—Florentine-school. Job, by Fra. Bartolommio—Isaiah, by the same—the visitation, by M. Albertinelli—two busts of Seneca.

Third Cabinet—Florentine-school. Head of Medusa, by Leonardo da Vinci!!!—an angel playing on a guitar,

254 LEFTERS FROM ITALY;

tury, and finished by Ammannati. In the court-yard is the basso-rilievo for a mule, who constantly drew the sledge which con-guitar, by Rosso!!—portrait of Dante—ditto of Petrarch—a Child holding a bird, by A. Allori—St. Peter, by Carlo Dolci—the ceiling is adorned with arabesques.

Fourth Cabinet, called the Tribune.—Statues—the Venus de' Medici, supposed to have been done by Praxitcles!!!!--the Lottatori, or Wrestlers!--the dancing Faun!!-the Apollo!! fo like the bronze statue of this God, by Praxiteles, in the Villa Albani at Rome, that many People suppose it to have been done by the fame Sculptor—the Arrotino !—Paintings -St. John in the wilderness!!!--Pope Giulio II.!!-and three other pictures, all by Raffaelle-Titian's Venus!!! faid to rival that of Praxiteles—a Sibyl, by Guercino-Massacre of the Innocents, by Daniello da Volterra!!!---the Virgin in contemplation, by Guido!-three pictures by Andrea Mantegna-two pictures by Parmigianino-the Madonna, our Saviour, St. John, &c. by Andrea del Sarto—a Holy Family, by Buonarroti—a picture by Albert Durer—another by Rubens—a Holy Family—by Correggio!—a portrait, by Vandyck-Judith with the head of Holofernes, by Leonardo da Vinci-a Madonna and Child, by Correggio-the Madonna, our Saviour, St. John, &c. by Pietro Perugino—a Madonna and Child, by Giulio Romana—a concert, by Bassano—portrait of a Cardinal, by Domenichino.

tained the materials employed in the buildings; and over this baffo-rilievo is a Statue of Hercules, and near it a Group like that called Fifth Cabinet—Venetian and Lombard-schools, &c. Head of St. John, by Correggio!!—our Saviour in the garden, by the same—a landscape, with Loves dancing, by Albano!!—the Madonna, our Saviour, &c. by Titian—a Sibyl, by Guido—Rape of Europa, by Albano—two drawings, by Salvator Rosa; and two paintings in oil, by the same—statue of a boy sleeping!—the ceiling is adorned with arabesques.

Sixth Cabinet—Dutch-school. Peasants at table, by F. Van Mieris!—a Madonna and Child, by Vander-Werf!!—a candle-light piece, by Van Ostade—two pictures, by Gerard-Douw—a table of Florentine work—the ceiling is adorned with arabesques.

Seventh Cabinet—Flemish and German-schools. Head of an old Man, exquisitely finished, by B. Denner!!—several small pictures, by Elzheimer—and one by Teniers—two landscapes, by Claude Lorrain—sour insides of churches, by Peter-Neess—a drawing, by Vandyck—ditto, by Rubens—fruit, by Mignon—the ceiling is adorned with arabesques.

Eighth Cabinet—French-school. A wild-beast hunt, by Gagneraus—two battle pieces, by Borgognono—a landscape, by Boguet de Chantilly—a portrait, by P. Champagne, Flamand!—an historical painting, by N. Poussin!—a small landscape, by Gas. Poussin—death of Socrates, by Fresnoy!—a statue of Venus!

called Ajax Telamon, of a Soldier going to inter his dead Comrade. The ceilings of this Palace, painted in tempera, by Pietro di Cortona and another of a Boy taking a thorn out of his foot!

—the ceiling is adorned with arabefques.

Ninth Cabinet. A capital collection of cameos, intaglios, precious vases, small statues, columns, &c.—A fine table of Florentine work—arabesques on the ceiling. Sulphurs of the cameos and intaglios, belonging to this collection, will shortly be sold at Florence.

Second Corridor—On each fide, near the ceiling, is a continuation of the portraits of the most renowned characters of antiquity. Here, likewise, are pictures containing the history of S. Maria Maddalena, together with several pieces of sculpture, among which is a Venus sitting on a shell, and a samous torso.

Third Corridor—The ceiling of this immense gallery is adorned with paintings, representing the revival of the arts and sciences, with other historical subjects, in which are introduced portraits of all the most eminent Characters among the Florentines. On each side near the ceiling is a continuation of the portraits of the most renowned Characters of antiquity. On the left-hand side, below the portraits, are paintings of the Neapolitan and other schools. Here, likewise, is a large number of statues and busts, among which are Morpheus in touchstone, and a copy of the Laocoon, by Bandinelli.

Teuth Cabinet. Portraits of Painters, chiefly done by Cortona and his Scholars, represent the patriotic actions of the Medici Family, under emblems taken from the Heathen Mythology.

Ceiling

by themselves—bust of Mrs. Damer, done by herself—a remarkably fine table of Florentine work.

Eleventh Cabinet: Portraits of Painters, chiefly done by themselves, and a beautiful marble vase representing the sacrifice of Iphigenia!!

Twiclfth Cabinet. Alti rilievi, busts, inscriptions, &c.

Thirteenth Cabinet. Pictures of various schools, among which is a fine sketch of the Madonna, St. Anne, &c. by Fra. Bartolommeo—a Man playing with a monkey, by Annibale Caracci—an assumption, by Volterrano—a fine table of Florentine work and a handsome vase.

Fourteenth Cabinet. Statues of Niobe and her Children!!! The group of Niobe and her youngest Child is beautiful, though one of the Mother's hands scems ill-restored. The dead Son is much admired, so likewise are six more of the figures. It is extremely to be regretted that these famous statues are not disposed in such a manner as to accord with the subject. Niobe and her youngest Child are by some Persons supposed to have been done by Scopas; but that they were the work of a Grecian Artist seems all which can be advanced with certainty. The other statues appear to be by various hands.

Vol. 1.

S

Fifteenth

Ceiling of the Camera di Venere. Minerva forcing a Youth, by whom is meant Cosmo I. from the arms of Venus, to place him under Fifteenth Cabinet. Grecian vases—little beasts in terra-cota, said to have been offered to the Gods by the Poor, instead of victims—feet, legs, &c. offered to the Gods in consequence of different cures, which last custom is still kept up in Roman-Catholic countries.

Sixteenth Cabinet. Statues, baffi-rilievi, &c. in bronze; the most celebrated of which is, Mercury standing on the wind, by Giovanni di Bologna!!

Seventeenth Cabinet. Etruscan Statues in bronze, the most celebrated of which are, an Orator and a Chimera—ancient instruments for facrifice—candelabres—lamps—rings—bracelets—ear-rings—metal mirrors—weights and scales—chirurgical instruments domestic utensils—manuscripts on wax—marking letters—household goods, &c.

The stair-case leading to the Royal Gallery is so fatiguing to Invalids, that they should always be carried up. The doors are opened at nine every morning, festas excepted, and closed at twelve; opened again at three in the afternoon, and closed at fix.

The Grand-Duke interdicts his Servants at the Gallery, the Palazzo Pitti, the Museum of Natural History, and the Academy of Fine Arts, from receiving gratuities; nevertheless, at the first-mentioned place a sequin seems expected by the Custodi, especially from Travellers who visit it frequently.

The Magliabechiana Library is under the fame roof with the Gallery.

the

the guidance of Hercules, while the Genius of War shews him the laurel wreath he ought to aspire after!!!—the continence of Scipio—Antiochus quitting his Mistress to go where duty calls him-Crifpus, Son of the Emperor Constantine, resisting the solicitations of Fausta, his step-mother—the physician discovering to Seleucus, King of Syria, that his Son was dying of a concealed passion for his Step-Mother-Cyrus difmisfing his Prifoner, Panthea, that he might not be feduced by her charms-Augustus fhewing Cleopatra that her beauty was incapable of captivating him-Alexander receiving the Mother and Wife of Darius with humanity, but without being betrayed into faulty admiration of the latter-Massinissa sending poison to the Queen of Numidia, that she might avoid, by death, the difgrace of fwelling Scipio's triumph. While Pietro di Cortona was employed in painting the Camera di Venere, Ferdinand II. who S 2 came came to view the work, expressed great admiration of a Child drowned in tears. "See," replied the Painter, "with what facility Children are made either to laugh or weep;" and, so saying, he gave one stroke with his brush, and the Child appeared to be laughing, till, with another stroke he restored the countenance to its original form.

Ceiling of the Camera d'Apollo. A Youth, who again represents Cosmo I. inspired with poetic fire, and Apollo shewing him the celestial globe, that he may sing of its wonders—Cæsar attending to instructive books as he walks, that he may not waste time—Augustus, after having shut the temple of Janus, cherishing the Muses, and listening to Virgil's Encid—Alexander preparing to march, and taking with him a sheet of the Iliad—the Emperor Justinian and his Counsellors forming a code of laws.

Ceiling of the Camera di Marte. Cofmo I. under the form of a young Warrior, leaping out out of a boat, and combating with his lance, while Mars affifts him, by darting lightning at his Enemies—Caftor and Pollux carrying the spoils of the Vanquished to Hercules, who makes them into a trophy—captives loaded with chains, supplicating the Goddess of Victory—Peace, with the olive in her hand, giving them comfort, while Abundance revives, and scatters blessings among the conquered People!!!

Ceiling of the Camera di Giove. Jupiter receiving a young Hero, who still represents Cosmo I. and is conducted to Olympus by Hercules and Fortune, in order to receive a crown of immortality. A Genius holds his hand before the Hero's eyes to prevent their being dazzled by the splendor of the Thunderer, while another Genius presents the young Man's armour, perforated with javelins, to the Goddess of Victory, who engraves his name upon a shield: she is supposed to have just begun, and only written the initial letter of the word, "Medicis." The frescos, in form of a fan, represent the blessings of peace, namely, Minerva planting an olive-tree—Mars mounted on Pegasus—Castor and Pollux leading their horses coupled together—Vulcan reposing in his forge—Diana sleeping after the chace—Apollo, God of Arts, and Mercury, God of Commerce and Wealth, appear among the emblems of Peace, while the General of the Vanquished is represented as making ineffectual efforts to snap his chains, in which attempt he is aided by Discord, who carries in her hand a torch to relume the slames of war.

S 3 the

Ceiling of the Stanza di Ercole. Hercules on the funeral pile, above which is the apotheofis of that Hero, whom Mars and Prudence conduct to Olympus, where he receives a crown of immortality.

Rooms on the ground-floor. Several paintings, among which are eight in imitation of bassi-rilievi, by Giovanni da San-Giovanni; and ten others by the same Painter, Cecco Bravo, Ottavio Vannini, and Francesco Furino, representing the revival of the arts and sciences by Lorenzo il Magnifico.*

of

The

* The Royal Apartments are splendidly adorned with gilding, beautiful tables of Florentine mosaic-work, and scagliusla, superb small filver statues, and some of the most celebrated pictures in the world, namely, three landscapes, a battle-picce, the conspiracy of Cataline, and the portrait of a Poet, all by Salvator Rofa—the demon of war forcing Mars from the arms of Venus, by Rubens!!!-two landscapes and a Holy Family, by the fame—St. Mark, by Fra. Bartolommeo—Philip II. of Spain, by Titian-portrait of Cardinal Ippolito de' Medici, by Titian-Titian's Mistress, by himself -our Saviour in the garden, by Carlo Dolci-Leo X. with the two Cardinals, Giulio de' Medici (afterwards Clement VII.) and Luigi di Rossi, by Raffaelle!!!the Madonna della seggiola, by the same!!!!-Rubens, his brother, and two Philosophers, by Rubens!!! a Holy Family, by Andrea del Sarto-our Saviour and other figures, by Cigoli!—Paul III. by Titian—the annunciation, by Andrea del Sarto-Cardinal Bentivoglio, by Vandyck!!!—a Holy Family, in Raffaelle's fecond manner-a dead Chrift, with St. John the Evangelift, Joseph of Arimathea, Mary Magdalene, &c. by S 4 Pietro,

The Giardino di Boboli is very large, and contains several pieces of sculpture, the most remarkable of which are, the Fountain at the end of the great walk, decorated with a colossal Neptune standing on a granite bason, above twenty seet in diameter, with the Ganges, Nile, and Euphrates beneath, all by Giovanni di Bologna—Neptune in bronze, surrounded with Sea-Monsters, by Lorenzi, Pietro, Perugino—a Holy Family, by Titian—Giulio II. by the fame—a drawing of the Fates, by Buonarroti!!!—a Sibyl, by Titian—Charity, by Guido—a Madonna and Child, by Raffaelle—God the Father, by the fame—the Madonna, our Saviour, and feveral other figures, by the fame—a portrait, by Rembrandt!!!—Apollo and the Mufes, by Giulio Romano!!!—Cleopatra, by Guido—an infant Jefus fleeping, by Carlo Dolci!—Calvin, Luther, and Catherine, by Giorgione da Carlel Franco—and the apparition of our Saviour, by Bartolommeo.

The apartments in which the Grand-Duke receives Company are fplendid and comfortable.

A fouds is frequently accepted, though fometimes refused, by the Person who attends Travellers round the Palazzo Pitti. The usual hours of admittance are from ten till twelve in the morning, and from three till fix in the evening.

and

and four unfinished statues in a grotto, by Buonarroti. This garden is always open to the Public.

The Muses d'Istoria Naturale, collected by the late Grand-Duke, Leopoldo, is faid to be the finest Museum in the world, with respect to the anatomical preparations in wax and wood, the petrefactions and minerals, and the thick-leafed, milky, and fpongy plants, which cannot be preferved in the common way, and are therefore beautifully represented in wax, to complete the botanical part of this princely collection. CAV. FELICE FONTANA is the Director of the Museum, and all the anatomical preparations in wax and wood have been, and ftill are, executed under his orders, except the famous representation of the Plague, which was done in the times of the Medici, and is so painfully fine, that few People can bear to examine it. This mafterly performance owes its present place to Sig. Giovanni FABBRONI, FABBRONI, a Gentleman whose brilliant genius and extensive knowledge have not only contributed largely to the improvement of the Museum, but likewise to that of arts and sciences in general.

Below stairs are a Laboratory and divers productions of Tuscany. On the first stoor, two rooms filled with large quadrupeds, sishes, and birds; a library; rooms destined to mechanics, hydraulics, electricity, and mathematics, together with a botanical garden;—and on the second stoor, near twenty rooms, containing the representation of the Plague, and the anatomical preparations, all of which may be avoided by Persons who do not like to see them. In another range of apartments, on the same stoor, are birds, sishes, reptiles, insects, shells, fossils, minerals, wax-plants, &c.

The Observatory makes part of the Mufeum, and contains good instruments.

This Museum is open to public inspection every every day, feflas excepted, from eight in the morning till twelve, and again from three till fix.

Santa Maria del Fiore, or the Duomo, was begun about the year 1294 by Arnolfo, and completed about the year 1445 by Filippo di Scr Brunellesco; the Lanthorn, designed by the last named Architect, is of folid marble, finely carved. The outward walls of the church are incrusted with black and white polished marble, the pavement is marble, and the balustrades and pillars which furround the Tribuna were defigned by Buonarrotti, and adorned with baffi-rilievi by Bandinelli and Giovanni del Opera. Towards Via de' Servi, over a door of curious workmanship, is an annunciation in mosaic, called by the ancients lithostratum, and done by Ghirlandajo; and another piece of the fame kind, by Gaddo Gaddi, is placed within-fide of the church, above the great door. Over the fouthern door is a group of the the Madonna and our Saviour between two Angels, by Giovanni, Pifano. The cupola was done by Brunellesco, who has gained immortal honour by the performance; it was painted by F. Zuccheri and Vafari. At the upper end of the choir is an ancient crucifix, by Benedetto da Majano, and behind the high-altar a marble Pietà, said to have been the last work of Buonarroti, which death prevented him from completing. This Cathedral contains portraits, statues, and monuments of celebrated characters of the Florentine Republic. On the right-hand, near the great door, is a marble bust of Brunellesco; next to this is a bust of Giotto; further on are Pier Farnese, General of the Florentines, and Marsilio Ficino, the Reviver of the Platonic philosophy, a Man as remarkable for his learning as for the lowness of his stature. Near the door leading to Via de' Servi is an antique portrait of Dante, the Father of Italian poetry, whose tomb.

tomb, however, is at Ravenna, where he died in exile. This portrait is by Andrea Orgagna; and so highly do the Florentines venerate the memory of Dante, that the place where he often used to sit in the Piazza del Duomo is carefully distinguished by a white stone. Near to this Poet is a picture of Giovanni Acuto, the Pisan General, and another of Niccolo da Tolentino; and under the first-named picture is an inscription which says, Acuto was a British Knight. In the Chapel of S. Zenobi is a bronze Ciborio, by Ghiberti, and the door of the Sacristy is by Luca della Robbia.

The Campanile, a quadrangular Tower, of red, white, and black marble, defigned by Giotto, and begun in 1334, is deemed the most beautiful edifice of its kind in Italy. The four Statues on the side nearest to the Baptistery are by Donatello, and one of these (called by its Author his Zuccone or Bald-pate) he preserved to all his other works.

works, partly from the beauty of the sculpture, and partly because it resembled one of his friends. The other statues are by Niccolo, Aretino, Andrea, Pisano, Giottino, and Luca della Robbia.

S. Giovanni, or the Baptistery, supposed to have been originally a temple of Mars, is of an octangular form, with a roof fomewhat like that of the Pantheon. The exterior walls are incrusted with polished marble, and the two bronze doors, done by Ghiberti, after the defigns of Arnolfo, and formerly gilt, are fo peculiarly beautiful, that Buonarroti used to fay, they deserved to have been the gates of Paradife. The other door was executed by Andrea, Pisano, after the design of Giotto. The foliage and festoons round the firstnamed doors are by Ghiberti's Son, Bonacorsa: the bassi-rilievi represent Scriptural histories. Without-side of the Baptistery is a celebrated group in bronze, by F. Rustici, representing John the Baptist with a Scribe and and a Pharisee. The two porphyry columns on the fides of the principal entrance were presented by the Pisans to the Florentines, in consequence of the latter having guarded Pisa while its Inhabitants were engaged in fubduing Majorca and Minorca; and the pendant chains feen here, and in other parts of the City, are trophies won by the Florentines when they conquered the ancient Porto Pisano. The interior part of the Baptiftery is adorned with fixteen immense granite columns, which support a gallery; and between these columns are statues representing the twelve Apostles, the law of nature, and the written law, all by Ammannati, except St. Simon, which, in consequence of the original statue being broke, has been replaced by Spinnazzi. The high-altar is adorned with a statue of St. John Baptist in the act of being transported to Heaven by Angels, and this group and the pulpit are by Ticciati. On the ceiling are mosaics Teffi, Gaddo Gaddi, &c. The pavement is chiefly ancient mosaic, and in one part represents the sun with the twelve signs of the zodiac. In ancient mosaic, likewisc, is the sollowing inscription, which may be read either backwards or forwards: "En giro torte Sol ciclos et rotor igne:" Phœbus drives on oblique his fiery car.

The Church of S. Lorenzo, built at the expence of a Lady named Juliana, who lived in the reign of the Emperor Theodofius, confecrated in 392, and rebuilt in 1425, by Brunellesco, contains two Pulpits adorned with bronze bassi-rilievi, by Donatello—a picture representing the marriage of the Madonna, by Rosso—the Chapel de' Principi, designed by Buonarroti, and adorned with the tomb of Giuliano de' Medici, Duke of Nemours, and Brother to Leo X., on which tomb is a statue of the Duke, together with a recumbent figure of Day, and another of Night.

Night, all by Buonarroti—the tomb of Lorenzo de' Medici, Duke of Urbino, ornamented with a statue of the Duke, together with a recumbent figure of Twilight, and another of Daybreak, all by Buonarrotiand here likewise is a Madonna and Child, by the same great Master. The high-altar of the Church, done by command of the late Grand-Duke, and defigned for the Chapel of Medicis, is beautiful Florentinework, and over it is a crucifix by Giovanni di Bologna—a Madonna, by Buonarroti and a St. John, by one of his Scholars. The old Sacrifty was built by Brunellesco, and contains a buft of Leonardo, by Donatello -and a porphyry tomb with bronze ornaments, made to contain the bones of Pietro and Giovanni, Sons of Cosmo Pater Patriæ, by Verrocchio.

Adjoining to the Church of S. Lorenzo is the Mediceo-Laurenziana Library, embellished with architectural ornaments by Buo-Vol. I. T narroti, narroti, and particularly rich in ancient manuscripts.

The Chapel de' Medici, likewise adjoining to the Church of S. Lorenzo, was begun in 1604, by Ferdinand I., after his own defign. Three hundred Workmen were, for a confiderable period, employed upon this building; but latterly the number has been leffened, so that it is not yet half completed; and we have already feen the ducal Family of Medicis extinct, nay, perhaps may fee the Dukedom itself annihilated, ere the finishing stroke be given to this Maufoleum of its Princes. The building is octangular, and the walls beautifully incrusted with almost every kind of precious marble. Six fides of the octagon are embellished with farcophagi of Egyptian and oriental granite, made after the defigns of Buonarroti, and two of them enriched with cushions of red jasper, which bear a regal crown of great value. Here, likewise, are two statues in bronze, one of which which is by Giovanni di Bologna. The farcophagi are mere ornaments, the bodies of the Princes being placed perpendicularly under them in a fubterranean repofitory.

The Church of S. Marco, belonging to the Padri Domenicani, contains a picture of the Madonna, our Saviour, and Saints, by Fra. Bartolommeo—a recumbent Saint in bronze, by Giovanni di Bologna—the fall of manna, by Passignano—the Chapel of S. Antoniho, adorned with fine sculpture, after the defigns of Giovanni di Bologna, and likewise embellished with a picture, by Naldini, representing the conversion of St. Matthewand just without the Chapel, over the arch, S. Antonio in marble, executed by Giovanni di Bologna himfelf. In this Church are buried two celebrated Men, Angelo Poliziano, and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola, both highly famed for their learning; and the latter was not only styled, the Phanix of the Sciences, but called by Scaliger, "A Prodigy, a Man without a fault. They both died in 1494.

T 2

the

The Convent, to which the Church of S. Marco belongs, contains frescos by Poccetti, together with many rare and valuable manuscripts. In the Garden is a Chapel painted by Poccetti, and near it the Spezieria, samous for the best effences at Florence.

The reale Accademia delle belle Arti, founded by the late Grand-Duke, Leopoldo, is open to public inspection at the same hours with the Gallery, and highly merits notice, not only on account of the liberality of the institution, which gives all possible encouragement to rising Genius, but likewise as it contains excellent casts of the Baptistery-doors, and most of the fine statues yet discovered in Italy. Here is a noble Apartment sitted up with drawings, &c. for the use of very young Painters—another noble Apartment, containing every necessary accommodation for those those who are further advanced—a Gallery, containing paintings and sketches by celebrated Masters, among which is a curious old picture, by B. G. Angelico—and a painting, in another apartment, by Giovanni di San-Giovanni, of the repose in Egypt. This Academy likewise contains schools for architecture, practical mechanics, &c. and here also the Florentine-work is made.

Not far from hence are Cloisters, which formerly belonged to the suppressed Company of S. Giovanni Batista, but are now in custody of the Academy, where the key is always kept. These Cloisters, commonly called L'Oratorio dello Scalza, contain tempera-paintings of the life of St. John Baptist, all by Andrea del Sarto, except two, which are by Francabigio. At the entrance of the Court are figures representing Faith and Hope, and on the sides of the opposite door Charity and Justice, all by Andrea—the history of St. John commences with Zaccarius becoming dumb on account of his incredulity-II. Painting, Mary visiting Elizabeth—III. Elizabeth brought to bed— IV. Zaccarius bleffing St. John, who departs for the defert, by Francabigio-V. St. John meeting our Saviour as the latter returns from Egypt, by Francabigio-VI. The baptism of our Saviour, by St. John-VII. St. John preaching in the defart—VIII. The converted Jews receiving baptism—IX. St. John carried before Herod—X. Herod's fupper and dance-XI. The beheading of St. John.—XII. Herodius's Daughter bringing in the head. It is recorded that Andrea del Sarto received for these frescos only twenty livres each, though many of them are exquifitely fine!!!

The Church of the Annunziata is famous for a fresco-painting of the annunciation, done by a certain Bartolommeo, who being, it is said, at a loss how to make the countenance of the Madonna properly scraphic.

fell

fell asleep while pondering over his work; and, on waking, found it executed in a style he was unable to equal, upon which he instantly exclaimed, "A miracle, a miracle!" and his countrymen were too fond of miracles not to believe him, although the Madonna's face is by no means so exquisitely painted, as to be attributed to a heavenly Artist.

The Corridor leading to the Church is decorated with tempera-paintings, namely—a nativity, by Baldovinetti—S. Filippo Benizzi induced to embrace the monastic life in consequence of a vision, by Rosselli—S. Filippo covering a naked Leper with his own shirt, by Andrea del Sarto; and near this picture is the bust of Andrea—the next painting represents S. Filippi travelling towards Modena, and reviled by young Men who are sitting under a tree, which being struck by lightning, two of the Revilers are killed; this is by Andrea, as are—S. Filippo T 4 delivering delivering a young Person from an evil Spirit -a dead Child restored to life by touching the garment which covers the corpse of S. Filippo—Women and Children kneeling round a Friar who is adorned with relicks of S. Filippo's clothes—and feven lunettes on the other fide of the Corridor. The marriage of the Madonna is by Francabigio—the visit of Mary to Elizabeth, by Pontormoand the affumption, by Rossi. The Church of the Annunziata is loaded with ornaments; it contains, in the middle of the ceiling, an assumption, by Volterra, who likewise painted the cupola of the tribuna—in the chapel which encloses the miraculous picture is an altar adorned with filver baffi rilievi, before it are two filver candlesticks about fix feet high, and over it two large filver statues of Angels. The Ciborio is beautifully worked and adorned with a fine head of our Saviour, by Andrea del Sarto—two large pictures support a filver cornice, from which hangs a curtain curtain of the same metal, and under this is the miraculous picture, illuminated by upwards of forty large filver lamps and chandeliers. The pavement is porphyry and Egyptian granite; and adjoining to the Chapel is an Oratory, the walls of which are mosaic, and composed of agate, jasper, and other precious stones. The ceiling and lunettes of the Chapel del Crocifissi are by Volterrano. The ceiling of the great tribuna is by Poccetti; and behind the high-altar is a Chapel decorated after the defigns and at the expence of Giovanni di Bologna, who was buried in it. This Chapel contains a crucifix and bassi-rilievi in bronze, executed by Giovanni for the Grand-Duke, who thought they could not be more properly appropriated than in adorning the tomb of their Author. The cupoletta is by Poccetti. a Corridor on the left side of the Church is the Madonna del Sacco!!! deemed the masterpiece of Andrea del Sarto, and at which Buonarroti

Buonarroti and Titian are said to have gazed unceasingly. It is recorded that the Painter of this beautiful fresco did it for a sack of corn in time of famine. The other paintings in this cloister are by eminent Masters; and those in the Corridor, which contains the Madonna del Sacco, were done by Poccetti, who has represented the most remarkable actions of the fix Founders of the Convent. Another Corridor contains. Manetto preaching before S. Lodovico, King of France -and Innocent IV. making his Nephew Protector of the order of Servites, both by Roffelli; and the Madonna in a car, by Salimbeni. Another Corridor contains Alexander IV. giving Religion power to erect monaftries for the whole world, by Roffelli -Buonfigliuolo refigning the government of the church to Buonagiunta, by Poccettithree more paintings, by Salimbeni-and on the ceiling small portraits of illustrious Servites. The Refectory is adorned with a frcfco, fresco, by Santi di Tito: and on the top of the stairs leading to the Noviziato, is a pietà by Andrea del Sarto, deemed one of his best works. This great Painter lies buried in the open vestibule before the church. In the centre of the Piazza della Nunziata is an equestrian statue of Ferdinand I. by Giovanni di Bologna.

The Church of Sa. Maria Maddalena de'

Pazzi particularly deserves notice on account of the Neri-Chapel, situated on the right side of the Court leading to the Church, and said to contain in its Cupoletta, the masterpiece of Poccetti representing the mansions of the Blessied!!! The Capella-maggiore belonging to the Church is magnificent, being incrusted with marble, and adorned with twelve columns of Sicilian jasper. Here rest the bones of Santa Maria Maddalena de' Pazzi, surrounded by bassi-rilievi, expressing the most memorable action of her life, and four marble statues, representing her most conspicuous conspicuous virtues, namely, Piety, Sweetness, Penitence, and Religion—the curtain of the organ, done by G. B. Cipriani, (who has lest no other work in Florence,) represents Sa. Maria receiving the communion from the hand of our Saviour—and Christ in the garden is by Santi di Tito—the Chapter-room, and Resectory of the Convent to which this Church belongs, are embellished with paintings by Perugino, Rassaellino del Garbo, and other celebrated Masters.

The Church of Santo Croce, built about the year 1294 by Arnolfo, and afterwards repaired by Vafari, contains the tomb of Buonarroti, who was born at Chiufi, near Arezzo, in 1474, and died at Rome in 1563; but the Grand-Duke of Tufcany, jealous that Rome should have the honour of providing a grave for this great and good Man, ordered his body to be removed from thence and buried in the Church of Santa Croce. The Family of Buonarroti was noble, and Michael chael Angelo's Parents were very averse to his becoming an Artist, which they deemed derogatory to nobility. Michael Angelo, however, by unceasing importunities, at length prevailed upon them to let him follow his natural genius. Sculpture, Painting, and Architecture, are represented in mournful attitudes, fitting beneath the tomb of their Favourite, whose bust rests upon a Sarcophagus; and a small painting (done by Michael Angelo) is introduced among the ornaments at the top of the monument. The statue of Sculpture, by Cioli, is ill done; Architecture, by Giovanni dell' Opera, is more happily executed; and Painting, by G. Batista del Cavaliere, better still; the bust of Buonarroti is by the last-named Artist. Here, likewise, is the tomb of Pietro Micheli, called by Linnæus, "The lynx of botany"—and that of Machiavelli, erected 266 years after his death, at the expence of the Literati. In the Cavalcanti-Chapel is an annunciation, by Donatello, which established his fame as a Sculptor; and near it the tomb of Leonardi Bruni, Aretino, the Historian, on which is a Latin inscription that may be thus rendered—" Since Leonard died, History mourns, Eloquence is mute, and it is faid, that neither the Greek nor Latin Muses can refrain from tears." the Barberini-Chapel is a picture of S. Francesco receiving the slimmate,* by Naldiniin the Baroncelli-Chapel antique paintings on the walls, by Taddeo Gaddi; and over the altar a picture reprefenting the coronation of the Madonna, Paradife, Saints and Angels, by Giotto: and on the presses in the Sacrifty are twenty-fix paintings, by the lastnamed Master, half of which represent the life of our Saviour, and the other half that of S. Francesco!!! the altar-piece, and all the paintings on the walls, are by Taddeo Gaddi.

an

The

* The wounds received by our Saviour upon the crofs, and miraculoufly imparted to the Saint.

The Riccardi-Chapel contains picture of a S. Lorenzo giving alms, by Passignano—Sa. Elena, by Biliverti-S. Francesco, by Rosfelli—and frescos representing the life of St. Andrew, together with other frescos upon the ceiling, by Giovanni di S. Giovanni. In the Chapel of S. Francesco is a picture of that Saint, by Cimabue; but the most striking thing in this Church is the Chapel de' Niccolini, incrusted with Carrara-marble. The statues of Moses and Aaron are by Francavilla! and those representing Virginity, Prudence, and Humility, are attributed to the fame Artist, though, judging from their inferiority to the others, it feems improbable. The frescos in the Cupola, and the four Sibyls, are by Volterrano!!!—the next altar is adorned with a famous crucifix, by Donatello; beyond which is the martyrdom of S. Lorenzo, by Ligozzi, and a dead Christ, by Cigoli. The Chapel della Concezione was painted by Giotto; and next to it is the afcention.

cension, by Stradano; beyond which stands the monument of the great and deeply injured Galileo, erected by order of Viviani his Scholar: the bust of Galileo is by G. B. Foggini. It is said that Galileo was at first interred in the Piazza Sa. Croce (which is unconfecrated ground), because he lay under suspicion of heresy on account of his philosophical discoveries; nay, it is even afferted that the samily of Nelli (Viviani's Executors) sound some difficulty in obtaining leave to remove his bones into the church almost a century after his decease, and part of his works are still proscribed.

The spacious Convent of Sa. Croce contains paintings by Cimabue and Giotto.

The Church of Orfannichele is esteemed for its architecture, and was built by Giotto and Taddeo Gaddi, as the market for grain. Without-side are several pieces of sculpture, namely, Saints Matthew, Stephen, and John Baptist, by Ghiberti—St. John the Evangelist, gelist, by Baccio da Montelupo—Saints Peter, Mark, and George, by Donatello (and the last is deemed particularly fine)—Saint Philip, Saint Eligio, and four Saints in one group, by Nanni d'Antonio—Saint Thomas, by Andrea Verrocchio—St. Luke in bronze, by Giovanni di Bologna! and another Saint Luke, by Mino da Fiesole. The inside of the church contains sculpture by the Revivers of the art.

The Church of Santa Maria Novella, commenced in 1279, by two Dominican Monks, was so much admired by Buonarroti, that he used to call it, his Sposa. Over the middle door within-side is a crucifix, by Giotto; and among the paintings are the martyrdom of Sa. Catherina, by Bugiardini, several of the figures in which were designed by Buonarroti—and the Madonna, by Cimabue, supposed to have been the first work he ever did in Florence. In the choir behind the highaltar are seven paintings representing the life of the Madonna, and seven representing that of St. John Baptist, all by Ghirlandajo! they contain portraits of the Painter himself, and of feveral of his most illustrious Contemporaries, among whom are Pictro, Giovanni, and Lorenzo de' Medici. The paintings before the altar are likewise by Ghirlandajo. The adjacent Chapel contains a crucifix, done by Bruncllesco for the famous Countess who lived with Donatello. Another Chapel is painted by Andrea and Bernardo Orcagna, who have represented Hell in one part, and Heaven in another—the paintings over the door of the Campanile are by Buffalmacco. Without-fide of the Church, over the greatdoor, is the procession of Corpus Domini, painted by Giocchi, in 1616. 1he adjoining Convent contains feveral valuable frescos by old Masters, and, in the Spanish Chapel, are portraits of Cimabue, Simone Memmi, and the celebrated Laura.

Vol. I. U of

The Church of S. Spirito, built by Brunel-lesco, lesco, is, in point of architecture, the finest at Florence; and contains a samous copy of Buonarroti's Pietà, in St. Peter's, at Rome; and another, equally samous, of our Saviour bearing his cross (likewise a Rome); the sormer by Nanni di Baccio Bigio, the latter by Landini. The high-altar, inlaid with precious marbles, was crected by the Michelozzi-Family, at the expence of an hundred-thousand scudi, and is one of the most beautiful things at Florence.

The Church of Il Carmine, begun in 1268, was nearly destroyed by fire, and in consequence of that accident repaired about thirty years fince. The ceiling and cupola were painted by Stagi and Romei*—the picture of Tobias receiving his fight is by Ganbac-

* Subjects—the most renowned Characters of the Old and New Testament—the Prophet Elias carried up to Heaven in a chariot of fire—the Madonna putting the veil upon Sa. Maria Maddalena de' Pazzi—the blessed Angelo Mazzhingi in glory—and the ascension of our Saviour into Heaven.

U 2

ciani

ciani—and our Saviour on the cross, with three female figures, by Vasari. The Chapel della S. S. Vergine del Carmine, was painted by Masolino da Panicale, and Masaccio, his Disciple, the latter of whom is supposed to have been the first person who adopted the present improved style of painting; but, dying young, his work was finished by Filippo Lippi; and fo great is the merit of this Chapel, that Leonardo da Vinci, Bartolommeo, Andrea del Sarto, Buonarroti, and Raffaelle, are faid to have made it their chief study: the paintings represent the life of St. Peter. The organ is one of the best in Florence; and on its curtain is the Madonna and Saints, by Romei. But the most striking thing here is the Corsini-Chapel, magnificently incrufted with precious marbles, and adorned with an alto-rilievo, representing S. Andrea Corsini, (who from a Monk became Bishop of Fiesole,) ascending into Heaven; this is by G. B. Foggini, and over it is God the Father in glory, by Marcellini—the farcophagus in which the bones of the Saint are deposited, is adorned with filver bassin-rilievi, and on the sides of the Chapel are two marble alti-rilievi, by Foggini, one representing the Saint reading his first mass, and the Madonna appearing, and faying, "Thou art my Servant, I have chosen thee, and in thee will I be glorified;" the other representing his descent from Heaven to affist the Florentines in the battle of Anghiari!! The cupola was painted by Luca Giordano. In the Chapel della Communio is a Cupola by Romei, representing Melchifedeck offering facrifice for Abraham's victory. The Convent to which this Church belongs contains frescos by Procetti, &c.

The Gerini-Palace, in Via del Cocomero, contains a charming collection of pictures, among which are two infides of churches, by Petterneff!—two landscapes, by Salvator Rosa!!!—a Prometheus, by the same Master;

ter; and St. Andrew kneeling before his cross, by Carlo Dolci!!—all of which are particularly celebrated.* It is necessary to choose a light day for seeing this Palace, most of the rooms being very dark.

The Riccardi-Palace, which once belonged to the Medici-Family, is a fine building; the Gallery contains a ceiling beautifully painted by Luca Giordano!—the ceiling of the Library is by the same Master, and the collection of books and manuscripts one of the most valuable at Florence.

The Corfini-Palace is adorned with some good paintings.

The House of Buonarroti, in Via Ghibellina, is interesting from having been the residence of so great a Man, and likewise from containing some remains of his works.

The Strozzi-Palace is a fine piece of Tufcan architecture; and in the Uguccioni-Palace,

* This Collection, when I quitted Florence was faid to be upon fale.

lace, built by Buonarroti, is a painting of the passage of the Israelites through the Red Sea, by Perino del Vaga!

The great Hospital, near the Porta San-Gallo, called Spedale di Bonifazio, which receives the aged and crippled Poor, Lunatics, and Persons afflicted with chronic disorders, is spacious, clean, and airy. The Sick and Aged appear to be comfortably lodged and well attended, but the sunds belonging to this useful charity are not sufficiently ample to supply convalescent Patients with a proper quantity of nourishment. Detached from the rest of the building are excellent apartments for Lunatics; somewhat less care, however, seems to be taken of these unhappy Creatures than of others.

The noble Hospital of Santa Maria Nuova is faid to contain above a thousand beds, and the Patients are extremely well attended.

The Spedale degl Innocenti usually con-U 4 tains tains 3000 Children, who have not, however, a sufficient number of Nurses; and the custom of binding up every new-born Infant in swaddling clothes frequently distorts the limbs, and sometimes produces mortification and death.

The Column of Saravezza marble, in Via Romana, was crected by Cosmo I. in memory of the battle of Marciano; and the granite Pillar, near Ponte S. Trinita, was taken from Antoninus's Baths at Rome, and erected at Florence by Cosmo I. in memory of the conquest of Siena. There is a figure of Justice on its summit, which gave rise to the following proverb: "Justice at Florence is too high to be reached."

The bronze wild Boar, near the Portico, or Exchange, is a copy by P. Tacca of the famous antique in the Royal Gallery.

There are several Theatres at Florence, and the Opera-house, called the Pergola, is a beautiful edifice, remarkably well secured from from fire, and painted with peculiar elegance.

Over the Porta San-Gallo is a temperapainting by Ghirlandajo; and just beyond the gate a magnificent triumphal Arch, erected in honour of the Emperor Francis I. when Grand-Duke of Tuscany.

Without-side of a house near the Porta Romana is a singular fresco, by Giovanni di San-Giovanni, representing the city of Florence under the form of a Woman clothed in royal robes, and the other cities of Tuscany as Females paying homage to their Queen.*

The

* The Group which used to stand over a fountain near the Ponte Vecchio, and which bore the appellation of Ajax, Son of Talamon, self-murdered, and supported by a Soldier, has been lately taken down to be repaired, and placed in the Royal Gallery, while the group of Hercules killing the Centaur, by Giovanni di Bologna, is intended to occupy the place of the first-named group, which, on being removed from the advantageous situation where the wisdom of the Medici

The river Arno divides Florence into two unequal parts, which are united by four bridges; and that called Ponte Sa. Trinita, built by Ammannati, is deemed remarkably elegant.

All the Tuscan Cities are excellently paved and very clean. Florence is particularly famed for its beautiful mosaic work, but the woollen manusactory, once so flourishing, is now fallen into decay. The Brothers Pisani, in the Prato, have a Studio well worth notice, where all the finest pieces of ancient sculpture are copied in alabaster, and the merit of the vases is said to be especially great.

In this country is found a fort of marble which splits almost like slate, and when polished the variations of its yellow and brown

Medici-Family had placed it, turns out much inferior in point of merit to what Sculptors supposed, great part being modern, and the rest in many respects faulty; neither does it represent Ajax, but a common Soldier going to inter his dead Comrade.

veins

veins represent trees, landscapes, and ruins of old walls and castles. Several natural petresactions are likewise found in this neighbourhood.

A long residence at Florence is deemed injurious to the sight, owing, perhaps, to that glare which proceeds from the reslexion of the sun upon white houses, and also to the sogs which prevail in winter.

This city boasts the honour of having given education to Dante, Boccaccio, Petrarch, Corilla, (the great Improvisatrice, who was crowned at Rome) Americo Vespucci, (whose voyages to, and discoveries in, the new world, obtained him the honour of calling America by his own name) Machiavelli, Galileo, Buonarroti, and a greater number of distinguished Artists than any other place in Europe. The Accademia della Crusca, which has for a length of years been established at Florence, is too well known to need description; and this Academy is now united united with two others, namely, the Fiorentina, and the Apatisti, under the name of Reale Accademia Fiorentina.

The best Hotels at Florence are SHNEI-DERFF's, Pio's, and VANINI's. The water which supplies the city is unwholesome, that which comes from Fiesole excepted, namely, the fountains of the Piazza Sa. · Croce and the Palazzo Pitti. Travellers. therefore, should have their water fetched daily from one of these fountains. It is remarkable, however, that all the Florence water, when analized, appears wholesome; and, confequently, it feems probable, that the noxious quality may proceed from copper vases, in which it is drawn and usually fuffered to stand; though it is easy to meet with large glass bottles, secured by a case of reeds, for the purpose of holding water.

I will now close my letter with a list of the preceding churches, palaces, &c. as they lie near each other.

Duomo

Duomo-Campanile-Battisterio di S. Giovanni-Palazzo Riccardi-S. Marco-Reale Accademia—L'Oratorio dello Scalzo—Spedale di Bonifazio-Porta S. Gallo-Arco Trionfale—Statua di Ferdinando I.—alla Piazza del Annunziata-Spedale degli Innocenti-Chiefa del Annunziata-Sa. Maria Mad. de' Pazzi-Sa. Croce—Abitazione di Buonarroti—Sa. Maria Nuova col suo Spedale—S. Lorenzo— Liberia Mediceo Laurenziana—Cappella Reale -Baffo di S. Lorenzo-Sa. Maria Novella-Palazzo Corfini-Palazzo Strozzi-Colonna di Granito alla Piazza di S. Trinità-Ponte della Trinità-Galleria ducale-Palazzo Vecchio-Loggia-Fontana-Statua di Cosmo I. -Palozzo Uguccioni-Chiefa d'or-San-Michele-Palazzo Pitti-Giardino di Boboli-S. Spirito-Il Carmine-Porta Romana.

LETTER

LETTER XIV.

Florence, March 1798.

ì

CANNOT close my account of this City without mentioning the ceremonies of the Festa of S. Giovanni; on the vigil of which is the Corsa dei Cocchi, or Chariotrace, (probably an epitome of the ancient Etruscan games). This spectacle is exhibited in the Piazza of Sa. Maria Novella. At the upper and lower end of the Piazza are obelisks. to each of which is fastened a cord, whose centre is held up by fix poles, fupported by Men clothed in ancient ha-Round the Piazza, in an amphitheatrical form, are scaffoldings, ornamented with rough fresco-paintings of urns and statucs, which produce, however, a good effect; at the upper end is the Grand-Duke's box, handfomely handsomely decorated; under the scaffoldings are posted horse and foot guards; and all round the Piazza are balconies, windows, and even tops of houses, crowded with spectators; and what contributes materially to the beauty of the scene is the fanciful and clegant dress of the female Peasants. Were the chariots made in the ancient form, and the horses harnessed four a-breast, this spectacle would be far more interesting; but these carriages are modern in point of shape, and particularly clumfy, fo that nothing of antique costume meets the eye, except the habit of the Charioteers. On the morning of the Festa of S. Giovanni homage is paid by all the Tuscan Cities to their Prince; and this ceremony passes in the Piazza del Granduca; the throne of the Sovereign being erected under the Loggia, which is hung with fine tapestry, as is the Grand Duches's box. The balconies and fcaffoldings for the People are likewise handsomely decorated.

No

No fooner had the Duke afcended his throne. (which is furrounded by the Household and great Officers of State) than the procession commences with Men on horseback, dressed in ancient habits, and each carrying a banner, with the name of fome town or village in the Pisan-district inscribed upon it; then come Gentlemen representing the Possessors of the feveral estates in the neighbourhood of Pifa, each wearing on his arm a filver plate, the badge of fervitude. After these follow the Citizens of Pifa; then come immense wooden towers, representing the several cities of Tufcany; and thus far the procession passes in review before the Duke without paufing; but, when the Citizens of Siena arrive, they are fummoned three times to ftop, and on the third fummons, their Leader approaches the throne, and makes an oration, expressing forrow for the revolt his Countrymen were guilty of some hundred years ago, and promifing they will always be loyal in future, upon which he is ordered to depart in peace, without partaking, however, of the pleasures of the day. After the Sanesi have withdrawn, come the citizens of Florence, followed by the little Tuscan Army, which pays the military compliments to its Sovereign, and closes the procession. In the afternoon of the same day is the Corso dei Barberi, a race performed by horses without Riders; and which, from the multitude of People, the splendor of the carriages, and the elegant dreffes of the Spectators, forms an extremely gay fight. The poor horses have, fastened to their bodies, little fours fo contrived, that the quicker the animal gallops the more they run in to him. The race-ground is the Streets of Florence, where many of the Spectators stand without any defence whatfoever, urging the horses on, and frequently meeting with accidents. When these animals reach the goal, they are stopped by means of a large Vol. I.  $\mathbf{X}$ piece piece of canvas, which several Men hold up; the Grand-Duke then announces the winning horse, and thus ends this amusement, which is followed by a pretty exhibition of fireworks at the Palazzo Vecchio.\*

The game called Pallone, a favourite exercise at Florence has also attracted our notice, on account of its being handed down by the ancient Romans, who are described as striking the follis, or baloon, with their arm, guarded (for that purpose) by a wooden bracer; the mode of playing continues precisely the same to the present moment, and this game, like most of the ancient exercises, is aptly calculated to give courage and strength.

* So univerfal is the rage for splendor at this Festa, that a Milliner, at whose house one of our Friends lodged, absolutely hired, for the day, at an enormous expence, a coach with two Footmen in laced liveries, that she might parade about the streets in style: nay, further, this Lady and her Apprentices, though generally dressed like Housemaids, were now adorned with diamonds of some value.

No

No City in Italy can boast environs so rich and beautiful as those of Florence, the whole Val d'Arno abounding with corn, vineyards, fruit-trees, comfortable farm-houses, and magnificent villas, while the mountains are clothed with olives, and adorned, like the plain, with noble and almost innumerable edifices.

The usual airing of the Florentine Nobility is to the Grand-Duke's Cascini, where People are allowed to walk, ride, and drive, at all hours, though it is deemed unwholesome to stay after sun-set.

Carreggi de' Medici, about three miles from the Porta S. Gallo, was the favourite retreat of Lorenzo il Magnifico; and in the hall of this Villa the Platonic Society used to assemble, and form plans for those stately edifices and patriotic institutions by which Lorenzo so much benefited and embellished his country. The house stands upon an eminence, from whence the ground falls gradually dually almost every way, opening on one fide to a noble view of Florence, on another to a boundless prospect of Val d'Arno, while on another rise mountains sp tted over with magnificent villas, and, on another yet, vaults Ficfole, dignified with ruins of ancient Roman splendor; and to complete the deliciousness of the situation, cool and refreshing breezes almost constantly blow about noon from the Gulph of Spezia, and make the fortunate Inhabitants of Careggi unconscious of oppressive heat even in the dog-days. No wonder then that the elegant and wife Lorenzo should have called this his favourite abode! Careggi, like the generality of Tuscan villas, is built upon arches, and confifts of an immense groundfloor, with a spacious hall in its centre, and feveral furrounding-rooms; every ceiling being arched, and every apartment cool. Aboveftairs is another large hall, together with a magnificent fuite of rooms terminated by a beautiful beautiful terrace; and round the third story runs a gallery, which commands a prospect fo extensive, that it seems to overlook all Tuscany. On the outside of the house are noble porticos. The water at this villa is peculiarly fine, owing in fome measure to the following circumstance: When the great Lorenzo was feized with his last illness, a famous Physician of Padua was summoned to attend him, he did fo, and exerted his utmost skill, but to no purpose: Lorenzo died-when fome of his Household, frantic with grief, met the unsuccessful Physician, and threw him down the weil. The dead body was of course drawn up, and the well fo nicely cleaned, that its water has ever fince been fuper-excellent. It is remarkable, that the above-named Physician, when resident at Padua, had his nativity cast, and was told, he would be drowned; he therefore quitted Padua, from whence he was frequently compelled to go by water to Ve-X 3 nicc. place, and come to fetter at a forence. as a place where water-carriage was unnecessary; thus furnithing an example—

"That human forefight In vain effays to 'scape th' unerring stroke Of Heaven directed Destiny."*.

Pratolino, a royal Villa, about fix miles from the Porta S. Gallo, is famous for its garden, which contains a Statue of the Apennines, fixty feet high, by Giovanni di Bologna, together with some curious waterworks.

Fiefole merits attention, on account of its antiquity, though very little now remains of the ancient Roman buildings.

Vallombrosa, about eighteen miles from Florence, is well worth seeing, not only from being immortalized by Milton, but likewise on account of the beauty of the country, and the noble Certosa of Vallombrosa,

* My Family refided for a confiderable time in this Villa.

which

which contains capital paintings by Andrea del Sarto, a famous picture by Perugino, a good Library, &c. Mules, however, are the necessary conveyance for persons who cancel walk, there being no coach-road to the tear ent.

The modern Florentines, like their Etrufcan Ancestors, are fond of learning, arts, and sciences; and, what is still more estimable and endearing to Foreigners, they are, generally fpeaking, good humoured, warm-hearted, and friendly; fuch, at least, have I found them for feven successive years. The Tuscan Peafants, confidered collectively, are pure in their morals and pastoral in their lives, and the peculiar comeliness of both sexes is very striking, especially in the environs of Florence; but it is only among the Peafantry that one can form a just idea of Italian beauty; and perhaps I might add, it is only among the Peasantry one can form a just idea of the Italian character, Inhabitants of po- $X_4$ pulous pulous Cities being nearly alike, whether in London, Paris, Vienna, or Italy. The Men are tall, robust, finely proportioned, and endowed with that entire felf-possession which at once excites respect, and perhaps a more favourable opinion of them than they really deferve. The women are of a middle rature, and, were it not for bad flays, would be well made. They have large languithing black eyes, accompanied by that expreffive brow which constitutes the most remarkable and captivating part of an Italian countenance. Their manners are uncommonly graceful, and instead of curtiying, they gently bow their bodies and kiss the hand of a Superior. When two young People agree to marry, the bands are published three times in a Parish-church, after which they receive the nuptial benediction. The Bride's portion is paid three days before marriage, one half in wearing-apparel, the other in money, which the Bridegroom usually expends pends in purchasing jewels for his Lady, which confift of a pearl necklace, crofs, and car-rings, frequently intermixed with rubies, and worth twenty or thirty pounds sterling; these jewels being always considered by the Man as the Woman's exclusive property. In short, money so invested may be looked upon as placed in a bank, while t interest received is that high gratification which the Woman derives from exhibiting her ornaments on Gala-days, and these ornaments continue in the Family for ages, unless the preffing call of necessity compel them to be pawned or fold. When the Spofa is taken in labour, the Husband, after procuring medical help, deems it his next duty to get fome of what is termed, the life-giving plant, (aleatrice the Peafants call it), which he places on her bed, and without which he believes his Child cannot be born: this custom is faid to be derived from the ancient Romans. About a fortnight after

314 LETTERS FROM ITALY,

after the birth of the Infant, its Parents give what they denominate, a feaponata, or christening dinner,* to their Relations, on which occasion every Guest brings a present; and the dinner is served dish by dish, which is likewise said to be an ancient Roman custom. On the Husband's demise, the eldest Son becomes Heir at law, but is obliged to portion his Sisters, and either maintain his Mother, or return her dower. All his Relations frequently live with him; but the largeness of the Family creates no confusion, there being a Head over the Men, and another over the Women, who allot to every Person their business, which is thus kept distinct. A Tuscan Farmer, as I have already mentioned, shares equally with his Lord in the produce of an estate, and the Owner even provides feeds, plants, manure, instruments of husbandry; in short, whatever may be requisite for the cultivation of the land. The upper class of Farmers usually possess a horse and market-cart, a waggon or two, and a pair of large dove-coloured oxen, who draw the waggon and the plow, whose colour seldom, if ever, varies throughout Italy, and whose beauty is as remarkable as that of their Masters. The female Peafants, besides working in the vineyards almost equally hard with the Men, frequently carn money by keeping poultry, and fometimes one or two lambs, (whose fleecy coats the Children decorate on the Festa of S. Giovanni with scarlet ribbands tied in fantastic knots), and, by the aid of money thus acquired, wearing-apparel, and other common necessaries are purchased. Shoes and stockings are deemed superfluous, and merely ornamental even by the Women, who carry them in baskets on their heads till they reach a town, when these seemingly embarrassing decorations are put on; for the Contadina is as vain of her appearance as the Dama nobile; and no wonder, fince the Arcadian dreffes, and lovely countenances of these Peasants arrest every eye, and shew them, perhaps too plainly, how strong are their powers of attraction. The phraseology of the Florentine Peafants is wonderfully elegant, indeed their Italian is faid to be the purest now spoken: but the most remarkable quality in these People is their industry; for, during the hottest weather, they toil all day without sleep, and feldom retire early to rest; yet, notwithstanding this satigue, they live almost entirely upon bread, fruits, pulse, and the common wine of the country: however, though their diet is light and their bodily exertions are almost perpetual, they commonly attain old age, especially in the neighbourhood of Careggi.

CVCT

* Children in Roman Catholic countries, however, are christened immediately after their birth.

According to the laws of the late Emperor, Leopold, no one can be imprisoned for debt, though Creditors have power to feize feize the property of their Debtors; and no offence is punishable with death, though Murderers are condemned to perpetual labour as Galley-Slaves. Priests are not allowed to meddle in secular affairs; and the service of the Church is performed in Italian: and to these, and many other equally wise regulations made by Leopold, are attributable the almost total exemption from robbery and murder which this country enjoys, and the encrease to its population of two hundred thousand People: an astonishing difference, as the original number was only one million.

LETTER

LETTER XV.

Rome, January 1798.

BEFORE I enter upon a description of this City, I will attempt to give you a brief account of Siena, and other places through which we passed on our way from Florence hither.

Sicna, formerly called Sena-Julia, in honour of Cæsar, is, by some Authors, supposed to have been an ancient Town of Etruria, while others attribute its soundation to the Gauls who marched to Rome under the command of Brennus. It stands on the acclivity of a tuso-mountain; the buildings are handsome, and the streets airy, but many of them so much up and down hill as to be scarcely practicable for carriages. The climate is healthy and delightful during summer, mer, but too sharp for weak lungs in autumn, winter, and spring. This City is exempt from gnats, as, generally speaking, is every high situation in Italy. The wine, water, bread, meat, and fruits, are excellent; the People learned, amiable, and remarkably kind to Foreigners; and the Tuscan language is said to be spoken here in its utmost perfection, Some remains of the old wall of Siena are discoverable near the Church of S. Antonio; and several ancient Towers, Grottes, Cellars, subterranean Aqueducts, and, as it were, whole Streets excavated under the mountain, merit notice.

The Roman Gate is much admired.

The Cathedral, a master-piece of Gothic architecture, incrusted within and without with black and white marble, was erected about the year 1250; but, in 1284, the original front was taken down, and that which now stands, commenced by Giovanni, Pifano, and finished by Agostino and Agnolo, celebrated celebrated Sculptors of Siena. The Church contains painted glass windows done in 1549; and, in the veffels for holy water, are marble fish, so well executed that they appear to be fwimming. The pavement of this Cathedral is reckoned one of the most curious works of art in Italy, and confifts of scriptural histories wrought in mosaic. The story of Moses was designed by Beccasumi, furnamed Meccarino, and executed by various Artists about the middle of the sixteenth century. The story of Joshua is by Duccio di Buoninsegna, a native of Siena; in this pavement likewise are represented the emblems of Cities once in alliance with the Republic of Siena, namely, the Roman elephant with a castle on its back—the lions of Florence and Massa—the dragon of Pistoja—the hare of Pisa—the unicorn of Viterbo-the goose of Orvieto-the vulture of Volterra—the stork of Perugia—the lynx of Lucca—the horse of Arezzo—and the kid of Groffetto-here, also, is the she-wolf of Siena, borne in memory of Romulus and Remus; this work appears to have been executed about the year 1400. The pavement of the area under the cupola, and that before the high-altar, representing Abraham's intended facrifice of his Son, are particularly celebrated, and the last is attributed to Meccarino. The Chigi-Chapel, decorated by Bernini, is rich and elegant, and contains two pictures by Carlo Maratti. Near the entrance of the choir are four large temperapaintings by Salimbeni; the two first reprefenting Esther's elevation, and the manna falling from heaven; the two last, Saints of the City of Siena. The Chapel of S. Giovanni contains a good statue of that Saint by Donatello. Bufts of all the Popes down to Alexander III. are in this Cathedral, where formerly was the bust of Pope Joan, with the following inscription under it: "Johannes VIII. Fœmina de Anglia." The Li-Vol. I.  $\mathbf{Y}$ brary, brary, or Sacrifty, is now stripped of all its books, except some volumes of Church mufic, well worth notice on account of the illuminations. Here, likewise, is a samous antique marble Group of the three Graces, which was found under the Church; and on the walls are large frescos, representing the principal transactions of the life of Pius II. by Pinturicchio, after the designs of Raffaelle: the first painting on the right is said to have been wholly done by Raffaelle.

of

The Church of the Madonna di Provenzano contains—a holy Family, by Andrea del Sarto; and in the Sacrifty, one of the best works of Casolani, a celebrated Sancse Painter.

The Church of S. Lorenzo is famous for an ancient Roman inscription, and a Well, at the bottom of which is a fort of Fountain supported by columns that appear remarkably ancient.

The Church of S. Girolamo in Canpans contains contains a fine copy of Domenichino's famous communion of St. Jerome.*

The Dominican Church contains a painting of the Madonna, with our Saviour in her arms, done by Guido di Siena, in 1221, nineteen years before the birth of Cimabue.

The Church belonging to the Hospital of Sa. Maria della Scala contains an admired fresco by Cav. Conca, representing the pool of Bethesda.

The Palazza dell' Eccels contains the Sala della pace ornamented with paintings, representing the recreations of Peace on one side, and, on the other, Tyranny, Cruelty, Deceit, and War, all done by Ambrogio, Sanese, in 1338—the Sala di Consiglio, where are paintings relative to the history of Siena, by the same Master, and ancient Romans, by Bartoli—the Sala di Balia, adorned with paintings which represent the life of Alexander III. and arc highly valuable, because they exhibit the whole costume of the age in which they were done: they are of Giotto's school—the Sala del Consistorio, adorned with some of Beccasumi's finest frescos; and the judgment of Solomon, by Luca Giordano, with several other apartments, in which are works of Salimbeni, Casolani, &c. The Theatre makes a part of this Palace, and is large and commodious.

* Doubly valuable now, as the original is fent to Paris.

Y 2 ander

The Fonte Blanda, made in 1193, is so famous for the quantity and quality of its water, as to be mentioned in the Inferno of Dante; and, indeed, there are sew Cities, placed in so elevated a situation, that can boast such abundance of excellent water.

Siena contains a celebrated University, feveral Academies, valuable Libraries, Mufeums, &c. and gave birth to Gregory VII. and Alexander III. two of the greatest Sovereigns who ever filled the papal throne.

The environs of Siena are reckoned healthy, healthy, and appear to contain many Villas delightfully calculated for fummer habitations; but Travellers should be especially careful not to fix themselves within the influence of the Maremma, a space of country eighteen leagues in width, and four broad, situated near the sea, and deemed particularly unhealthy now, though it once was remarkably populous.

Beyond Siena lies S. Quirico, where the doors belonging to the Church are curious.

Between S. Quirico and Redicofani, three leagues to the left of the high-road, lies Chinfi, the ancient Clufium, (near the Lake of Chiana, anciently Clanius) but this City, once the Capital of King Porfenna, is at prefent thinly peopled, on account of its bad air.

At Buonconvento, the Emperor Henry VII. was poisoned by receiving the facrament from a Dominican Monk.

Y 3 At

At Redicofani the foil becomes evidently volcanic, and continues more or less so to the extremity of Italy. The country about Redicofani is wild and desolate.

Bolsena is situated on a Lake of the same name, anciently called Lacus Vulsinus, and thirty-five Italian miles in circumserence. This Lake contains two Islands, said by Pliny to have floated in his time, though at present they are fixed. Bolsena is supposed to stand upon the site of Volsinium, one of the principal cities of Etruria, but no monument of its antiquity remains, except one Sarcophagus in a church-yard; though when it was taken by the Romans, two hundred and sixty-sive years before Christ, they removed two thousand statues from hence to Rome.

Montefiascone, a beautifully fituated town near the Lake of Bolsena, is famous for the goodness of its wines. In approaching Viterbo terbo you ascend high mountains, but from Viterbo to Rome the road is chiefly level or down hill.

Viterbo, supposed to have been the ancient Capital of Etruria, called Volturna, is a well built city, containing several Convents and Hospitals, and a handsome Gate, crected by Clement XIII.

Ten miles from Viterbo, towards Rome, is the Caprarola Palace, celebrated for many beautiful paintings by Taddeo, Federico, and Ottaviano Zuccari. Nine leagues from Viterbo is Corneto, remarkable for the number of Etruscan antiquities which have been, and still are to be found in its vicinity; and one league north of Corneto is a hill, called Civita Turchino, upon which the ancient Tarquinium is supposed to have stood. Several little eminences, called Monti-Roffi, lie between this hill and the town of Corneto; and those which have been opened exhibit fubterranean rooms twenty or thirty feet Y 4 long, long, cut in the tufo, lined with stucco, decorated with Etruscan vases, and filled with farcophagi.*

I went a few weeks fince to vifit a Lady who lives about twenty miles from Leghorn, when, just as I was on the point of departure, my Hostess exclaimed, "Lord bless me! do you know that a Chevalier here has ploughed up the oddeft things today in his vincyard; they are just like Wedgwood's ware!" I could not refift going to fee these odd things, which consisted of two fmall farcophagi, filled with human ashes, and each containing a piece of money; a fet of kitchen utenfils, precifely formed like those now used by the Tuscans, but made of finer clay; feveral vases, and a fet of instruments for sacrifice: all of which, as I imagine, belonged to one of the abovenamed ancient burial-places.

At

* Villa Caprarolo, Corneto, &c. are out of the great-road.

BETWEEN 1792 AND 1798. 329

At some little distance from Viterbo, on the road to Rome, is the Lake of Vico, said to have been the sunnel of a volcano, and where, as tradition reports, a city once stood. The approach to Rome is by the ancient Via Flaminia, between the Pincian and the Marian hills.

LETTER

LETTER XVI.

Rome, January 1798.

R OME has fuffered fo much from the frequent ravages of Barbarians, that even the furface of the ground on which it originally stood is strangely altered; it being common, on digging deep, to discover pillars, statues, fragments of buildings, and fometimes even the pavement of the ancient City, twenty or thirty feet under ground. The stupendous common-sewers, through which the offal of Rome was conveyed into the Cloaca-maxima, are many of them choaked up, and even the Cloaca-maxima itself is in bad order; this causes pestilential air; and workmen who, by digging deep, have opened apertures to the above-mentioned common-fewers, not unfrequently have loft their their lives from the putrid effluvia. The land in the neighbourhood of Rome is illcultivated, and worse drained, so that fogs and igneous vapours prevail during night; it likewise abounds with sulphur, arsenic, and vitriol: moreover, there are alumworks near the City; and hence rifes noxious air, which never affected ancient Rome, because these minerals were either unknown to its Inhabitants, or fuffered to remain buried in the bowels of the earth. The temperature of the scasons also seems to be changed; for Horace gives us to understand that in his time, the streets of Rome, during winter, were filled with ice and fnow; and it appears from Juvenal, that to fee the Tiber frozen over was no uncommon thing; whereas, at prefent, it is deemed extraordinary for fnow to lie three days in any part of the City; and, respecting the Tiber, no Person recollects to have feen it frozen. These circumstances concur to account for the prefent

fent unhealthiness of some parts of Rome, and all its neighbouring Campania, during fummer: besides which, the mouth of the Tiber is nearly choaked up with mud and fand, while its bed is confiderably narrowed by filth and rubbish thrown from the houses fituated on its banks, fo that a strong foutheast wind often makes it overflow and inundate the City and its environs. Could this river be turned into another channel, what immense riches, what a harvest for the Antiquarians might its present bed afford!— So unwholesome now is the Roman Campania in July and August, that, during these months, it is dangerous to fleep within twenty miles of the City. Rome itself, however, even at this scason, is not unhealthy for Persons who inhabit the Corso, or the Quirinal Hill, unless it be during the prevalence of a strong fouth-east wind, which is rendered peftilential by paffing over the the Pontine Marshes.* The ancient Romans had Aqueducts sufficient to convey daily to the City eight hundred thousand tons of water. The three principal Aqueducts now remaining are, that of the Acqua Virginia, that of the Acqua Felice, and that of the Acqua Paulina. The first was repaired by Paul IV. and discharges itself into the Fountain of Trevi. The second comes from the neighbourhood of Palastrina, twenty-two miles distant

* It may not, perhaps, be improper to mention here, that Perfons who wish to avoid the dangerous consequences of bad air, should choose a bed-room that does not face the south, shut their doors and windows at night, burn sweet wood in all their apartments, eat light food, drink wine in moderation, put vinegar and the juice of lemons and pomegranates into their sauces, never go out fasting, or before sunrise, drink cooling liquors, avoid night-air, never use violent exercise, swallow as little saliva as possible, and carry a sponge filled with Thieves' vinegar, smelling to it frequently. Quicksilver put into a quill, and sastened round the neck, so as to touch the bosom, is likewise deemed an excellent preservative against every kind of insection.

distant from Rome, and is one of the many works which do honour to the reign of Sixtus V. who expended a million of scudi in repairing it. This Aqueduct discharges itself into the Fountain di Termine. The third, which derives its name from its Restorer, Paul V. is divided into two channels, one of which supplies Mount-Janiculus, and the other the Vatican; it comes thirty miles, and principally discharges itself into the Fountain near the Church of S. Pietro Montorio. The water in the Piazza di Spagna is excellent.

Rome, during the reign of Valerian, was furrounded by a wall faid to have been fifty miles in circumference; and the number of inhabitants, during its most flourishing state, was computed at four millions. Modern Rome is not above thirteen miles round, neither is it supposed to contain above one hundred and eighty thousand People; but reduced as this ancient Mistress of the World now

Digitized by Google

now is, both in fize and population; reduced too as she has lately been in the number of her most valuable paintings and statues, still, however, the matchless frescos of Buonarroti, Raffaelle, Giulio Romano, Daniello da Voltera, Annibale Caracci, Guido, Domenichino, Guercino, Pietro da Cortona, &c. remain unalienably her's; still, however, her stately Palaces, noble Churches, beautiful Fountains, peerless Columns, and stupendous Obelifks, entitle her to be called the most magnificent city of Europe. Her streets, nevertheless, are ill-paved and dirty; while ruins of immense edifices, which continually meet the eyes, give an impression of melancholy to every thinking Spectator.

The climate of Rome is at all seasons particularly congenial to old People, insomuch, that there are not, perhaps, half so many instances of longevity, without infirmities, in any other populous City of Europe. The Corso is the situation to be preferred, both in winter and summer; the air near the Church of Santi Apostoli is likewise good; the Piazza di Spagna is unsheltered, and sometimes damp; the air of the Pincian and Quirinal Hills wholesome, but sharp. Travellers here, however, in order to preserve health, should follow the example of the Romans, and dress themselves particularly warm during winter, depending upon clothing more than fire to resist cold.

in

The fociety at Rome is excellent; and the circumstance of every Man, whether Foreigner or Native, being permitted to live as he pleases, without exciting wonder, contributes essentially to general comfort. At Rome too every body may find amusement; for whether it be our wish to dive deep into classical knowledge, whether arts and sciences are our pursuit, or whether we merely seek for new ideas and new objects, the end cannot fail to be obtained in this most interesting of Cities. The Academy of the Arcadians, too well known to need description, used to be one of the most agreeable public meetings at Rome, as it consisted of literary Characters, Nobility, and Princes, of every nation; and this Academy still slourishes, though the pastoral reed now vibrates with the unharmonious sounds of politics and war.

too

I will now endeavour to point out the most convenient way of visiting the Antiquities, Churches, Palaces, &c. in autumn, winter, and spring, mentioning the things best worth notice, as they lie near each other, in order to prevent Travellers from wasting their time and burdening their memory by a minute survey of what is not particularly interesting, and thereby, perhaps, depriving themselves of leisure to examine what really deserves the closest attention.

Vol. İ.

Z

FIRST

FIRST DAY.

Set out at nine in the morning, drive to the Coloffeo; go to the house within the walls, where there lives a Monk, who conducts Travellers fafely through the whole building—Give him three or four pauls. The Colifaum took its name from a colossal statue, one hundred and twenty feet high, of Nero in the character of Apollo, which was placed in it by Vespasian, who began this magnificent Amphitheatre, the largest in the yet discovered world: it was finished by Titus, which Prince, on the day when it first opened, is said to have had fifty thoufand wild-beafts killed in it. The building is one thousand six hundred and forty-one feet in circumference, and one hundred and twenty-feven feet high. The arena is oval, and two hundred and feventy-eight feet long by one hundred and feventy-feven wide:

wide: the seats are supposed to have contained eighty-seven thousand Spectators, and the porticos above them twenty-sour thousand. There was an awning which stretched over the whole building in case of rain or too intense heat. A considerable number of Christians suffered martyrdom in this Amphitheatre.

II. Tempio del Sole e della Luna. A large part of the walls of these Temples still remains.

III. Arco di Constantino, dedicated to that Emperor by the Senate and People of Rome, in memory of his victory over Maxentius at the Ponte Molle.

IV. Arco di Tito, built by the Senate and People of Rome, and dedicated to Titus in honour of his conqueit of Jerusalem. The small remains of this Arch prove it to have been finer than any other building of its kind. The bassi-rilievi represent the spoils of the Temple, among which may be distinguished tinguished the golden candlestick, the table of shew-bread, silver trumpets, &c.

- V. Via Sagra, celebrated for its antiquity, and likewise for being the spot where peace was concluded between the Romans and the Sabines. It began at the Coliscoum, and ended at the Arch of Septimus Severus.
- VI. Areo di Settimo Severo, erected A. D. 205, to the honour of that Prince, in confequence of his victories over the Parthians and other barbarous nations.
- VII. Tempio de Giove Tonante, built by Augustus Cæsar; only three columns with their cornices now remain; the last are very beautiful.
- VIII. Tempio della Concordia, built by Furius Camillus. In this temple Cicero convoked the Senate which condemned Lentulus and Cetegus, the Accomplices of Cataline. Nothing now remains but the portico.
  - IX. Chiefa di S. Pietro in Carcere. Un der der this Edifice is an ancient Prison, built by Ancus Martius, and called, Il Carcere Mamertino. Here St. Peter was confined; and in the lowest part of this prison, near a small column, to which the Apostle was bound, is a spring of water, said to have isfued forth miraculously, that he might baptize the two Gaolers and forty-seven other Persons, all of whom afterwards suffered martyrdom. N. B. Cold and damp.

X. Tempio di Saturno, (on the left-hand as you go up the Campo Vaccino). This Temple, now the Church of S. Adriano, or rather its fituation, merits notice, as before it stood the famous column, from whence the distance to every province was measured, and which is said to have been placed in the centre of ancient Rome.

XI. Tempio di Antonino Pio e Faustina, built A. D. 168, by the Senate and People of Rome, in memory of their Emperor Antoninus Pius and Faustina his wife. The fides of this Temple still remain, as do the portico and frieze, the last of which is beautifully worked.

Z 3 fides

XII. Tempio di Romolo e Remo, now the Church of Saints Cosmo and Damiano. There still remains of this ancient building the bronze-door, marble door-case, frieze, finely worked, and two beautiful porphyry columns. The cupola likewise is said to be antique. In this Temple was the pavement, which contained a plan of ancient Rome; and this plan, mutilated and broken, is deposited in the Museum of the Capitol, and still might, perhaps, were great pains taken, be once more joined together: the broken pièces, however, are now fixed in the staircase of the Museum above-mentioned.

XIII. Tempio della Pace. Vespasian, after terminating the war with Judea, raised this vast Edifice upon the ruins of the Portico of Nero's golden house, about the year 75. It was deemed the most magnificent temple of ancient Rome; three arches only now remain. One of the pillars, a fluted Corinthian column, of white marble, fixteen feet and a half in circumference and fifty high, without pedestal or capital, and which now stands before the Church of Sa. Maria Maggiore, ferves to convey some idea of the grandeur of this Temple, which is supposed to have been about two hundred and two feet wide and three hundred and two feet long. It was incrusted with bronze gilt, and ornamented with the best paintings and sculpture of the times. The Citizens depofited their wealth in this Temple; and here, likewise, Titus Vespasian placed the spoils of Jerusalem. In short, it served as a public treasury till about an hundred years after its foundation, when the whole building (with all the precious contents) was destroyed by fire. Many people conjecture that the ruins now shewn as the Temple of Peace, and the

of

Z 4

Temples

344 LETTERS FROM ITALY,

Temples of the Sun and Moon, are nothing more than remains of Nero's golden house.

XIV. Palazzo Imperiali. This vast Palace of the Cæsars, which enclosed gardens, ponds, baths, and edifices, so large, as to resemble little towns, is now so entirely destroyed, that nothing remains except vestiges of magnificent porticos, ruined walls, numberless arches, (which, from being clothed with verdure, make the scenes remarkably picturesque) and two small rooms under ground, called Livia's Baths, and deserving notice on account of the paintings with which they are decorated. These Baths, however, are too damp and close for Invalids. Give three or four pauls to the Man who finds lights.

XV. Villa Spada, on the fite of the Palazzo Imperiali. At the end of the garden belonging to this ruined Villa is the foot from whence the Emperors are supposed to have have given the fignals relative to the games in the Circus Maximus; and from this spot, (now marked by iron-rails,) is an excellent view of the just-named Circus, which was made by Tarquinius Priscus, between the Palatine and Aventine hills. Its length is computed to have been four stadia, or furlongs, its breadth the fame, with a trench of ten feet deep, and as many broad, to receive the water, and feats for one hundred and fifty thousand Spectators. It was much beautified by fucceeding Princes, particularly by Julius and Augustus Cæsar, Caligula, Domitian, Trajan, and Heliogabulus, and enlarged to fo vast an extent as to contain, in their respective seats, two hundred and fixty thousand spectators. The form of this Circus may still be traced, and the trench and water still run through its centre. The Villa Spada contains a gallery painted by the Scholars of Raffaelle, but the key of this apartment is usually kept in Rome.

XVI. Re-

XVI. Returning from the Palace of the Cæsars, and going down the Campo Vaccino, on the left hand is the Tempio di Giove Stator. There still remain three superb isolated columns, supposed to have formed part of the portico of this Temple.

XVII. Campo Vaccino. This made part of the ancient Forum Romanum, supposed to have been about seven hundred and fifty seet long, and five hundred broad. It was built by Romulus, and surrounded with porticos by Tarquinius Priscus. There were two kinds of Forums, namely, Fora Civilia, and Fora Venalia—the first serving as ornaments to the city, and likewise as Courts of Justice—the others as market-places. The Forum Romanum was of the first kind, and in this Forum were the Comitium and the Rostra.

XVIII. Tempio della Pudicitia, now the Church of Sa. Maria in Cosmedin. This Edifice stands a little to the left of the Temple of Jupiter Stator—in the portico is a curious curious ancient mask, called Bocca della Verita—in the Church are several antique shafts of pillars, and an antique pavement. The inside of the Church is very damp and cold.

XIX. Tempio di Vesta, built by Numa, and repaired either by Vespasian or Domitian. This Edifice is, in great measure, persect; but the twenty Corinthian columns of Parian marble, by which it is surrounded, formed originally an open portico, now filled up with a wall.

XX, Tempio di Fortuna Viriles, now the Church of Sa. Maria Egizziaca. This Temple, highly curious from its great antiquity, is supposed to have been built by Servius Tullus; and the form of the ancient edifice, together with several of the columns, and part of the cornice, still remain: nothing of them is to be seen, however, within-side. These columns and their cornice are Ionic, and composed of stone stuccoed, like the ancient Greek Temples.

XXI. Arce

XXI. Arco di Giano Quadrifronte. This building, said to have been a market-house, is composed of immense pieces of white Greek marble.

XXII. Cloaca Maxima, or great Common-Sewer, made by Tarquinius Priscus. Close to the arch of Janus, on the left hand, is part of this building, and almost under the Temple of Vesta is where it opens into the Tiber.

XXIII. Campidoglio. Returning through the Campo Vaccino, and afcending the backway by the stairs, parallel with the Arch of Septimius Severus, you see, on the lest-hand side of these stairs, several immense stones, supposed to be the soundations of the ancient Capitol. The number of edifices which stood on the spot of ground so called, lead us to imagine that its extent must have been immense. The square was adorned with porticos built by Scipio Nasica, and, in its centre, was the triumphal arch of Nero.

The

The most ancient Temple was that of Jupiter Feretrius, crected by Romulus. The Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, erected by Tarquin the Superb, was wonderfully magnificent. The Church of Sa. Maria d' Aracali is faid to be built on the foundations of this Temple, and the columns now in that Church are supposed to have belonged to it. In this Temple were deposited the spoils of conquered nations, as offerings to the Gods from the Senate, Confuls, and Emperors of Rome. The statue of Jupiter was gold; fo likewise was that of Victory, which is said to have weighed three hundred and twenty Here likewise was the Temple of pounds. Jupiter Moneta, of Fortuna Primigenia, of Fortuna Privata, of Fortuna Vifcola, of Faith, of Vejovis, Isis, Serapis, &c. embellished by statues without and within, fo that the Capitol was denominated, " The Hall of the Gods." All these magnificent edifices, however, are now destroyed, insomuch that the modern modern Capitol bears no semblance to the ancient. The present steps and two sidebuildings were planned by Buonarroti, at the command of Paul III. and the Senators' house was repaired under the direction of the same Artist. On the top of the steps are two colossal Statues, reputed to be Greek sculpture, one representing Castor and the other Pollux, with their respective horses; and, on a line with these statues, are beautiful trophies, called those of Marius, but rather supposed to have been done in honour of Trajan's victories over the Dacians. Statues of the two Sons of Constantine, together with two Roman Mile-Stones, that marked "I" being ancient, the other modern. In the middle of the square is a bronze equestrian Statue (once gilt,) of Marcus Aurelius!!! The Senators' palace was erected by Boniface IX. on the ruins of the ancient Tabularium; under the steps is Rome triumphant, of Parian marble draped with porphyry, porphyry, together with two other statues of Greek marble, one of which represents the Nile, the other the Tiber. The Museum is on the right of the Senators' house; and the most interesting pieces of sculpture it now contains are, the river-God-Diana-Pyrrhus-Egyptian Idols-a fine Vafe-a Cupid—Agrippina feated—two Boys, the one playing with a mask, the other with a fwan-Pfyche-a falling Gladiator-two Centaurs—Marius—an Amazon—bufts of Cicero, Nerva, Antoninus Pius, Trajan, &c. -mosaic of the Pigeons-a Greek Vase of bronze, found in the port of Antium—and a Faun in red Egyptian marble! Give three pauls.—This Museum is very cold. The Confervatory, on the left of the Senators' house, contains below stairs, Rome triumphant, and the weeping Province!!!-a lion devouring a horse !- busts of Commodus and Domitian—immense fect, and one hand of a mutilated statue of Apollo-Statues of Julius lius and Augustus Cæsar—and the rostral column! Above stairs, on the first floor, are paintings by Cav. d'Arpino—the bronze wolf, faid to have been struck with lightning when Cæfar fell-a bust of Appius Claudius-Medufa's head!-and Hercules in bronze gilt! the only antique statue in Rome on which the gilding remains. two pauls. On the jecond floor is the picture gallery, containing Guercino's Sibyl-a young Man and a Gipfey, by M. A. Caravaggio-the battle of Alexander and Darius, by Pietro di Cortona, &c. Give two pauls. The Conservatory is very damp and cold. To the left of the Confervatory is the Tarpean Rock, and to the right the Church of Sa. Maria d' Aracæli, already mentioned. At the bottom of the steps are two basalt lionesses of Egyptian workmanship, and near the lioness, on the left hand, is the trunk of a porphyry statue finely draped.

XXIV. Pantheon. This magnificent Temple, which has, in great measure, defied the injuries of time, seems as if preserved to latter ages for the purpose of furnishing a just idea of ancient Roman taste and splendor. The general opinion feems to be, that it was crected during the time of the Republic, and afterwards adorned with its present noble portico by Agrippa, the Son-in-law of Au-It was likewise repaired by succeeding Emperors. Originally there were feven steps leading up to the portico; now two only are above-ground. The portico is fixty-nine feet long by forty-one wide, and supported by fixteen prodigious columns, each being a fingle piece of red oriental granite. The circumference of each column is fourteen feet; the height thirty-eight and a half, without bases or capitals, which are white marble, and of the Corinthian order. The rafters of the ceiling were originally covered with thick plates of bronze, which were taken away to make the baldaquin, &c.

Vol. 1.

Digitized by Google

A a

in

in St. Peter's: and likewise to make cannon for the Castle of St. Angelo. The ancient bronze-doors, adorned with baffi-rilievi, were taken away by Genseric, king of the Vandals, who lost them in the Sicilian sea; the door-case still remains. The front of the edifice, without-fide, was covered with bronze gilt, and the top with filver plates, now changed for lead. The diameter, within-fide, is one hundred and thirty-three feet, and the height precifely the fame. The walls are incrusted with marble, and it is believed that the Cariatides, mentioned by Pliny, made part of the ornaments of this building. The dome is faid to have been originally incrusted with filver. Agrippa dedicated the Pantheon to Mars and Jupiter the Avenger, in memory of the victory gained by Augustus over Anthony and Cleopatra. It was likewise consecrated to Cybele, Mother of the Gods, all of whom had their respective statues here, in bronze, filver, gold, or precious marble. The statues of Augustus and Agrippa were placed at the entrance of the Temple; that of Jupiter the Avenger in the centre of the tribuna, the infernal Deities on the pavement, the terrestrial in the exterior chapels, and the celestial in the interior. The pavement is composed of porphyry and giallo antico, bordered with other precious marbles. The aperture for light is twenty-five feet in diameter. The chief riches of this Temple were removed to Constantinople by Constantine II. There are Persons who suppose the Pantheon to have been originally a part of some ancient Baths; and those of Agrippa certainly were immediately behind it. Here are the monuments of Metastasio, Raffaelle, Annibale Caracci, Mengs, Nicolas Pouffin, Perrino del Vaga, Taddeo Zuccheri, Vacca, Corelli, Sacchini, Winkelmann, and Benefiale. The Pantheon is always cold, and very damp after rain.

The Obelisk, before the Pantheon, is Egyp-A a 2 tian tian workmanship, and originally stood before one of the small Temples of Isis and Serapis, which were near that of Minerva.
These Egyptian Obelisks, brought to Rome by order of the Emperors, are not only the chief ornaments of the City, but highly valuable likewise on account of their great antiquity; many of them having, it is said, been made five or six hundred years before the Christian era.

SECOND DAY.

I. Tempio del Sole nel Giardino Colonnese. Go to the Piazza in which stands the Church of Santi Apostoli, and in a small street to the lest of the Church, you will find a door leading into the Colonna-Garden, where there is an immense fragment of the Temple of the Sun, said to have been erected by Aurelian. There still remains a piece of the cornice and frieze, from which we may, in some

The workmanship is exquisite, and the columns are supposed to have been seventy feet high. This Garden likewise contains ruins of Baths, said to have been those of Constantine. Pass through the Colonna-Garden, (if you can obtain permission,) to that gate which opens upon Monte Cavallo, Give one paul and a half.

II. Statues, Horfes, and Obelifk, in the Piaxa di Monte Cavallo, so called from the admirable sculpture with which it is embellished, namely, two colossal sigures, supposed to be Castor and Pollux, each holding a horse. These twin Gods, the work of Phidias and Praxiteles, are esteemed the sinest pieces of sculpture in Rome, especially that done by the first-named Artist. They once adorned Athens, and are generally supposed to have been brought to Rome from Alexandria by Constantine the Great; though some Authors tell us, they were sent to Nero as a present, by Tiridates, King of Armenia. The horses are ill-executed, and chiefly modern. The Egyptian Obelisk, which stands in the centre of the statues, was crected by the present Pope. It is composed of red granite, and measures forty-five feet without the pedestal. It originally adorned the Mausoleum of Augustus.

A a 3

to

- III. Palazzo Pontifico. The Chapel painted by Guido merits notice. Give two pauls, unless the Custodi be sent for on purpose to open the Chapel, when he will expect three or four.
  - IV. Bafilica of Nerva. This Bafilica was an immense Court of Justice; the three beautiful columns which remain are Greek marble; their circumference is fixteen feet and a half, and their height fifty-one; an architrave which remains is much ornamented and finely worked.
  - V. Tempio di Pallade, erected by Domitian, The two Corinthian columns now remaining are nine feet and a half in circumference; the the entablature and freize abound with wellexecuted ornaments; and, on the entablature, is a large figure of the Goddess in altorilievo.

VI. Chiesa di S. Stefano degli Ungheri, or S. Stefano Rotonda, formerly the Temple of Claudius. This beautiful and interesting Edifice was built by Agrippina in honour of her Husband Claudius, destroyed by Nero, and rebuilt by Vespasian. Pope S. Simplicius converted it into a Christian Church, and Gregory XIII. gave it to the German College. The interior part still retains the precise form, together with all the majesty of an ancient Temple, and is embellished with two rows of columns, fifty-eight in number, and chiefly granite. It is necessary to fend a day before hand, in order to be fure of feeing this Church. Give three pauls, provided the doors be opened on purpose for you. The infide is remarkably damp and cold.

VII. Villa Mattei. The garden of this

A a 4 neglected

neglected Villa contains a celebrated coloffal bust of Commodus, and commands a fine view of Caracalla's Baths, which are faid to have contained separate bathing places for three thousand persons, including one thoufand fix hundred marble feats: the apartments were decorated with precious marbles and bronze gilt; the floors paved with mofaics: and here were found the Hercules of Glycon, and the Farnese bull. Ruins of a large number of rooms may still be discovered; but most of the apartments destined for bathing are buried under-ground, and the whole building is in fo imperfect a state as to be fearcely worth a minute investiga-Give one paul and a half. This garden is very damp.

On going out of the garden, you see, before the Church of Sa. Maria della Navicella, the model of an ancient bark.

VIII. Chiefa di S. Gregorio nel Monte Celia, faid to be built on the foundations of a Patriciantrician-house, and to retain its ancient form. It commands a fine view of Titus's Baths. and the Coliffæum; and, by entering the quadrangle, and ringing a bell on the righthand, you may always gain admittance to this Church. In a Chapel adjoining to which, is a picture by Annibale Caracci, of S. Gregorio praying between Angels, faid to be the chef-d'œuvre of colouring; and, in a detached Chapel, are two celebrated frescos, the one painted by Domenichino, the other by Guido, in order to prove which was the better Artist; that done by Domenichino reprefents the flagellation of St. Andrew!!! that by Guido represents the same Saint going to martyrdom!!! Here, likewise, in an adjoining Chapel, is a statue of S. Gregorio, begun by Buonarroti, and finished by Nicolas Cordieri. Give one paul. This Church and the Chapels are damp and cold.

IX. Terme di Tito. Send an hour or two before hand, and let the Man who keeps the key key know at what time you defign coming, Wear thick-foled shoes, or boots, guard your head against damp, and have a great-coat ready to put on when you come out of this Cavern. The Romans learnt the use of Baths from the Greeks; and, though at first employed merely for the purposes of health, they in time became an object of luxury and magnificence. The Baths of Titus were smaller than those of Dioclesian and Caracalla, but more elegantly ornamented: the lower part of the edifice ferved for bathing, the upper part for academies and gymnastic exercises. In the lower part, which now is underground, and therefore extremely damp, are the remains of beautiful arabefques, from which Raffaelle is supposed to have taken many ideas. You go down with lights. Above-ground are what is called the feven faloons, supposed to have been refervoirs for water, and originally confifting of nine rooms above-ground, besides those underneath.

 $\mathbf{T}$ hc

The ruins of Titus's Palace, which communicated with the Baths, are still visible. In this Palace was found the famous Laocoon; and, in the Baths, the Aldobrandini marriage. Near this spot was the Tower whereon Nero is supposed to have stood to enjoy the burning of Rome; and near this spot, likewise, were the gardens of Mecenas, and the houses of Horace and Virgil. Give five or fix pauls to the Man who finds lights.

X. Chiefa di S. Martino in Monte. Under this beautiful little Church is a part of the Baths of Titus, now converted into a burial-place, and famous for being the spot where Pope Silvestro held a council, assisted by Constantine and his Mother. The mosaic-pavement, and matted roof of the Baths, (on which perhaps were paintings) still remain persect, as do the walls; consequently, you have the exact dimensions far better than in what is called, the Baths or Grotto of Titus. Here, however, no paintings are discernible; but, but, here, you encounter no very damp air; and, therefore, Invalids may go down with tolerable fafety, which they certainly cannot do into the Grotto of Titus. The Church of S. Martino contains beautiful marbles, clegant gilt ornaments, and landscapes on the walls, by Gaspero Poussin, with figures, by Nicolas, his Brother. The steps leading down to the burial-place under the high-altar, and the burial-place itself, were designed by Pietro di Cortona. The columns which support the Church are said to have been brought from Adrian's Villa, at Tivoli. Give a couple of pauls to the Person who opens the burial-place.

Duc,

XI. Battisterio di Costantino. This Edifice was built by Constantine, and repaired by Gregory XIII. and Urban VIII. The Font is an ancient tomb of marble of Ponsevero; the Dome is supported by fine porphyry columns, with an antique entablature, and adorned with paintings, representing the life of St. John Baptist, by Andrea Sacchi. In one of the Chapels are two curious stuted pillars of verde antique; and in the wall of one of the entrances are two noble porphyry columns, and an antique entablature without-side.

XII. Bafilica di S. Giovanni in Laterano. This noble Edifice was erected by Constantine the Great, and called the Mother Church of Rome, though St. Martin and St. Luke is really fo. The front of the building, towards the Naples-gate, is beautiful, and the bronze-door, ornamented with bash-rilievi, was taken from the Temple of The Corfini-Chapel is very magnificent, and contains the famous porphyry Bath, or Sarcophagus, which once graced the Panthcon. The pavement of this Chapel, and indeed of the whole Church, is fine. Here are statues of Saints Thomas and Bartholomew, by Le Gros; and St. Andrew, St. James minor, and St. John, by Rusconi.

The

The Altar of the Holy Sacrament is adorned with four magnificent antique fluted columns of bronze gilt, supposed to have been taken from the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, and brought originally (it is said) from the Temple at Jerusalem. Above these columns is a tempera-painting, by Cav. d'Arpino, representing the ascension of our Saviour into Heaven!!! At the top of the centre aisle, near the high-altar, are two noble columns of red granite; near the door leading to the Baptistery, two of giallo antico; and in the Sacristy is an annunciation, designed, if not executed, by Buonarroti. This Church is always open, and tolerably warm.

The Obelish, which stands before the Church of S. Giovanni in Laterano, is the largest at Rome, and supposed to have been even more losty once than it is at present. It was originally placed in the Temple of the Sun, at Thebes, by Ramesses King of Egypt. Its height, without base or pedestal, is one hundred and fifteen feet, its diameter nine.

is

XIII. Tempio di Minerva Medica. This picturesque Ruin stands in a garden, the door of which will generally open if pushed hard. In this Temple was found the celebrated statue of Minerva, with the serpent at her seet, now to be seen in the Palazzo Giustiniani.

Not far from the Temple of Minerva Medica is the Church of S. Bibiana, which contains the statue of this Saint by Bernini, said to be one of his best works.

XIV. Arco di Gallieno, commonly called Arco di S. Vito. According to the inscription on the frieze of this Arch, it was erected in honour of the Emperor whose name it bears.

XV. Piazza di Sa. Maria Maggiore. Here stands the Column, before mentioned, which was taken from the Temple of Peace, and which (though only one pillar of that Temple)

ple) impresses the speculative mind with a stronger idea of ancient Roman magnificence, than almost any other vestige now remaining.

XVI. Bafilica di Sa. Maria Maggiore. This Church was erected upon the foundations of an ancient Temple of Juno Lucina, about the year 352, and afterwards enlarged by Sixtus III. The nave is supported by antique Ionic columns, thirty-fix of which are white marble, and four granite, The Baldacchino is supported by antique columns of porphyry. The Chapel of Sixtus V. which contains his ashes, is a fine one, and the Borghese-Chapel, is reckoned the most magnificent in Rome: it was built by Paul V. and contains paintings of Guido's. The altar of the Madonna in this Chapel is decorated with a large quantity of oriental jasper, agate, and lapis lazuli. The Sforza-Chapel was defigned by Buonarroti. This Bafilica is fo loaded with gilding, and other ornaments, that it refembles fembles a place of public diversion more than a Christian Temple. It is always open, and tolerably warm. The arch which separates the nave from the choir is covered with mosaics of the fifth century.

On going out of the Church, at the opposite door to that where you entered, is an Egyptian Obelisk of red granite, forty-three feet high without the pedestal. It was brought to Rome by the Emperor Claudius, and served as one of the ornaments to the Mausoleum of Augustus.

XVII. Terme di Diocleziano. These Baths, supposed to have been the most spacious in Rome, were one thousand two hundred seet in circumserence, and that part which was destined merely for bathing is said to have extended three miles. Here were groves and walks, schools for arms and sciences, with a suppose suppose of painting and sculpture were conserved. This saloon is now converted.

verted into the Church of Sa. Maria degli. Angeli, the entrance to which (a rotunda) was one of the stews, or Calidarium, belonging to the Baths. The Church of S. Bernardo was another of these Calidarium, which, according to some Authors, however, were not tepid baths, but rooms for exercifes. Part of the Baths are converted into the Pope's oil-cellar, which, being warm and dry, may be viewed without danger, and is highly worth investigation: but, in order to gain admittance you must, generally speaking, go before eleven in the morning. The entrance to the oil-cellar is close to the Church of Sa. Maria degli Angeli. Pius IV. dedicated Dioclesian's Baths to facred uses. because the forty thousand Christians who built them suffered martyrdom; and Buonarroti, who was employed to erect the Church, finding among the ruins of the Baths an immense room, supported by eight columns of oriental granite, (the abovenamed named Pinacotheca, where the Youth performed their exercises in bad weather) formed out of it the present Church in the shape of a Greek cross. The entrance to this majestic Edifice, which may vie with St. Peter's in beauty, contains the monuments of Carlo Maratti and Salvator Rofa. The nave of the church is one hundred and feventy-nine feet long, its height one hundred and five feet, and the eight antique columns abovementioned are fixteen feet in circumference and forty-three high. The pavement is beautiful. Here is a picture of the fall of Simon Magus, by Pompeio Battoni. The baptism of our Saviour, by Carlo Maratti, and the martyrdom of S. Sebastiano, by Domenichino! This Church is generally shut by eleven in the morning, and opened again between two and three. It is dry, and not very cold. Give two pauls at the Pope's oilcellar, if you are supplied with lights.

B b 2

XVIII.

XVIII. Chiefa di S. Bernardo. This church merits notice, as belonging to Dioclesian's Baths. The ancient form and roof are quite perfect, and very beautiful. Admission may be obtained at any hour by an application at the adjoining Monastry.

XIX. Obelish before the Church of Trinita de' Monti. This Obelish was crected by the present Pope, and is forty-four seet high, without the pedestal.

XX. Chiefa di Trinita de' Monti, famous for a fresco-painting by Daniello da Volterra, representing the descent from the cross!!!!

THIRD DAY.

I. Chiefa de Sa. Maria del Popolo. This church contains a statue of Jonas, designed by Rassaelle, and executed under his immediate direction, by Lorenzetto!!!

II. Obelisk

- II. Obelisk in the Piazza del Popolo, said to have been made at Heliopolis sive hundred and twenty-two years before the Christian era: its height, from the ground to the top of the cross, is one hundred and twelve feet.
- III. Colonna Antonina. This Column, erected by the Roman Senate, was dedicated by Marcus Aurelius to his Father-in-law, Antoninus Pius. It is of the Doric order, and adorned with baffi-rilievi, representing the triumphs of Marcus Aurelius over the Marcomanni. The statue of the above-named Emperor, together with his ashes, was placed on the fummit of the column; his statue was of bronze gilt, but, being extremely injured by fire, Sixtus V. replaced it with the statue of St. Paul, likewise bronze gilt. This column is very inferior in point of workmanship to that of Trajan; it measures fifteen feet in diameter, and one B b 3 hundred hundred and forty-two from the base to the top of the statue.

١.

e,

IV. Solar Obelisk in the Piazza di Monte Citorio. This Obelisk, made by order of Sefostris, King of Egypt, was erected by Augustus Cæsar, in the Campus Martius, where it ferved as a fun-dial. It is composed of red granite, measures sixty-six feet, pedestal inclusive, and was placed in the Piazza di Monte Citorio by the present Pope.

V. Colonna Trajana. This beautiful Column was erected at the beginning of the fecond century by the Senate and People of Rome, in honour of the victory gained by Trajan over the Dacians. On the fummit of the Column was a statue of the Emperor made of bronze gilt, and holding a globe, wherein his ashes were deposited. Sixtus V. changed this statue for one of St. Peter. The height of the Column, from its base to the top of the statue, is one hundred and and thirty three feet, near fifteen of which are under the present level of the ground. This Column is of the Doric order, and adorned with fine bassi-rilievi, representing the Dacian war!!! The spot on which it stands was the centre of Trajan's Forum. It is one of our noblest monuments of antiquity, and was designed, and in great measure executed, by Polidorus, a celebrated Grecian Artist.

VI. Teatro di Marcello, now the Palazzo Orfini. This Theatre was erected by Augustus Cæsar, in honour of Marcellus, the Son of his Sister Octavia; and the architecture is so fine, as to have served as a model for all succeeding ages. Considerable remains of this Edifice may still be discovered, although the Palazzo Orsini is built with, and upon its ruins.

VII. Portico di Ottavia. This Edifice, which stands in the Pefcaria, or fish-market, was erected by Augustus in honour of Octa-Bb4 via.

via. There are confiderable remains of the building; but it stands in so damp a situation, that Invalids should not venture to visit it.

VIII. Palazzo Corfini.*

* This Palace contains an immense and rare collegtion of prints, together with a large number of pictures, among which are the following: First rooma curious old painting, by Angelo di Fiesole. Second room-two fmall landscapes, by Salvator Rosa!-a bust of Seneca-Prometheus, by Salvator Rosa! Third room—an Ecce Homo, faid to be the chef-d'œuvre of Guercino!!! the lower part of the picture, however, is unfinished—a portrait by Rembrandt!!!—St. John when a child, by Carlo Maratti !-- a sketch of the Madonna and our Saviour, by Vandyck-Marriage of St. Catherine, by Sasso Ferrata!!—a consular chair, with baffi-rilievi, antique, and very curious! Fourth room-a hare, by Albert Durer !- Noah's facrifice, by N. Poussin!!!-S. Agostino and a choir of Angels, by Garofalo!!!--two fmall pictures reprefenting the infide of churches, by Petterneff. Fifth room—a miniature painting (of the birth of our Saviour, by Albert Durer-a Madonna and Child, defigned by Buonarroti. Sixth room—two small pictures, by Andrea di Fiesole -a head, by Holbens! Seventh room-a landscape, by G. Pouffin—a Madonna and Child, by Murillo—a wild beaft hunt, by Rubens-two small landscapes, by G. Pouffin. Give four pauls. This Palace is cold.

IX. Church

- IX. Church of S. Onofrio on the Janiculum Hill. Here are Taffo's monument, and fome fine paintings by Domenichino; and in the Convent adjoining to the Church is a buft of Taffo, moulded from his face.
- X. Villa Lanti, famous for commanding a most extensive view of Rome.
- XI. Palazza Sa. Croce. In the Court below are two fine friezes and a head of Homer.*
  - XII. Palazza Spada.

XIII. Bafilica

- * Above Stairs, in the anti-chamber, or Servants'-Hall, is an Apollo in bronze. Most celebrated pictures in the Palace—Job on the Dunghill, by Salvator Rosa!!—St. Jerome, by Bassano—a large landscape, by Poussin—Fortune, by Guido—a battle, by Salvator Rosa!!!—Europa, by Guercino—four pictures of the four seafons, by Albano!!!—The assumption, by Guido!!!—St. John, by Guercino—Our Saviour contemplating the globe, by the same. Tolerably warm. Give three or four pauls.
  - + Below stairs—Eight bassi-rilievi in one room, and a beautiful sitting figure of a Grecian Philosopher, said to be Antisthenes, in another. Give two pauls; the Custodi not being the same as above stairs. These apartments

378 LETTERS FROM ITALY,

XIII. Bafilica di Antonino Pio. Eleven columns and a large entablature still remain to shew how magnificent this building once was. The capitals are Corinthian, and the columns thirty-nine seet high; they now make part of the Dogana appointed to receive merchandize, which comes to Rome by land.

ments are cold. Up-stairs in the hall is a colossal statue of Pompey, said to be that at the foot of which Cæsar fell. Most remarkable pictures—Head of a Cardinal, by Guido—Judith with the head of Holosernes, by ditto—the sacking of a village, attributed to Teniers, but more probably by Brughel—a small landscape, by G. Poussin—head of Seneca, by Salvator Rosa—St. Anne teaching the blessed Virgin to work, (more like a country School-mistress and her Scholar) by M. A. Caravaggio!!—Death of Dido, by Guercino—Portrait of the samous Cenci, by Paul Veronese—St. Jerome, by Spagnoletto—Heads of two Boys, author uncertain!!—a snow-piece, by Teniers—a full-length of Cardinal Belardino Spada, by Guido. Give four pauls.

FOURTH

FOURTH DAY

I. Maufoleo d'Augusto. Augustus Cæsar, during his sixth consulate, crected, in the Campus Martius, this superb Mausoleum for himself and Family. It originally had three circular walls, but one only now remains standing; and this Mausoleum has of late years been converted into a theatre for bull-fighting.

The Campus Martius, which originally belonged to the Tarquins, and, after their expulsion, was dedicated to Mars, comprehended an immense tract of ground, extending, in the time of Augustus, from his Maufoleum to the Theatre of Marcellus, and from the foot of the Pincian, Quirinal, and Capitoline hills, to the Tiber; in Nero's reign it reached to the Ponte Molle.

II. Mole

II. Mole Adriana, now Castel di S. Angelo, This magnificent building was erected by the Emperor Adrian, nearly opposite to the Mausoleum of Augustus. It consisted of two stories, was incrusted with Parian marble, furrounded with magnificent columns, and adorned with statues. Some Persons imagine that the bronze pine, now in the Belvedere-Garden at the Vatican, was originally placed on the top of this Mausoleum, and ferved to contain the ashes of Adrian. while others conjecture that his statue was on the top, and that his ashes were deposited in a porphyry urn, or farcophagus, now in the Corsini-Chapel at S. Giovanni di Laterano. After the fall of the Roman Empire, this building became the Citadel of Rome, and acquired the appellation of Castello di S. Angelo, from a statue of the Arch-Angel Michael, now placed on its fummit.

III. Fon-

- III. Fontana Paulina, defigned, at the command of Paul V., by Giovanni Fontana. This water was brought to Rome by Augustus, to supply his Naumachia; and there are considerable remains of the ancient Aqueduct near the Villa Pamfile.
- IV. Fontana Navona, defigned by Cav. Bernini, at the command of Innocent X. The four coloffal statues represent the Ganges, the Nile, the Plata, and the Danube. The Obelisk, which is of red granite, measures sifty-one seet, and was brought to Rome by order of Caracalla, who placed it in his Baths. The Piazza Navona was anciently the Circus Agonalis, and still retains its original form.
- V. Fontana di Trevi. The water which fupplies this beautiful Fountain was brought to Rome by Agrippa, for the use of his Baths behind the Pantheon, and derives its name name of Acqua Virginia from a young female Peafant who discovered the source, and shewed it to some samished Soldiers. It is the best water at Rome. The decorations of this Fountain were designed by N. Salvi, at the command of Clement XII. The statues represent Ocean, Salubrity, and Fecundity; and the bassi-rilievi over the two last represent Agrippa and the Peasant Girl.

VI. Fontana di Termine, designed by Fontana, at the command of Sixtus V. In the centre of the building is Moses striking the rock; and on either side a basso-rilievo, one representing Aaron conducting the Israelites to quench their thirst; the other Gideon encouraging them to pass the river Jordan, and directing his Soldiers to lead the way. This Fountain is likewise ornamented with four lions, two of which are white porphyry, and and two bafalt; the last being Egyptian sculpture, and highly esteemed; they were formerly placed under the portico of the Pantheon.

BETWEEN 1792 AND 1798. 383

THE END OF VOL. 4.

T. Gillet, Printer, Salisbury-square, London.

RX 000 503 537

